for propaganda purposes and are given little chance to win any seats. Only four parties are expected to obtain a significant vote. They were the front-runners in last year's election for the National Constituent Assembly: the Socialist Party, the Popular Democratic Party, the Communist Party and the Social Democratic Center.

Communist Party kept their position as a strong minority party. As the race closed in, political analysts, questioned with concern whether a solid governing majority was possible in this deeply divided society. Mario Soares, the optimistic leader of the Socialists, insists that his party will win a larger vote than last year's 37.8 percent.

Mr. Hughes' accounts about his condition in his final days. R. Hughes have interviews and reports about the onair's death on

Dr. Victor Emanuel Montemayor, a Mexican physician summoned to examine Mr. Hughes in Acapulco early on the morning of April 5, said that one of Mr. Hughes' doctors had a "convulsion" on Friday, April 2, and that he had been in a coma since that time. "I have the impression that it was a brain hemorrhage that started off the entire problem," Dr. Montemayor said in an interview. "The coma was very deep and there was no explanation because the kidney analysis was practically normal. On Friday he had a violent and sudden shock, which I imagine was the stroke probably through a brain hemorrhage. Immediately he entered into a coma."

NEW YORK SCHOOLS PLAN GRADE SHIFT IN ECONOMY MOVE

5th and 6th Would Return to Elementary System, Ending 'Middle' Setup

By LEONARD BUDER
The Board of Education is considering a major change in the organization of the school system that would return all fifth-grade and sixth-grade classes to the elementary schools, possibly saving the hard-pressed system nearly $8.2 million a year. The change would put a halt to 10 years of movement toward the development here of a new type of middle school—now known as the intermediate school—that was intended to cover the fifth through the eighth grade of instruction and replace the traditional junior high school.

Morgenthau Acts to Give Aides More Responsibility

Assistant Prosecutors to Handle Cases From Beginning to End

By TOM GOLDSTEIN
In a major restructuring of his office, District Attorney Robert M. Morgenthau of Manhattan said yesterday that, starting May 3, one lawyer would be responsible for a case "from the complaint room to the defendant's final day in court." At present, as many as seven or eight assistant district attorneys may handle a criminal prosecution, an approach that Mr. Morgenthau sees as a "conveyor belt system of justice."

JUSTICES UPHOLD MINORITY HOUSING IN WHITE SUBURBS

Rule, 8-0, Courts Can Act to Ease Segregation Even if Law Is Not Broken

By LESLEY OELSNER
Special to The New York Times
WASHINGTON, April 20—The Supreme Court ruled today, 8 to 0, that Federal courts can order the creation of low-cost public housing for minorities in a city's white suburbs to relieve racial segregation in housing within the city. Courts can do this, under the ruling, even when the suburbs involved have not been guilty of racially discriminatory housing practices.

Looks to Reagan as Well as Other Candidates to Give Their Data

By JAMES M. NAUGHTON
Special to The New York Times
WASHINGTON, April 20—The White House announced today that President Ford paid more than $94,000 in Federal income taxes for 1975, and received an $11,600 refund from the Internal Revenue Service. In making the announcement, Ron Nessen, the White House press secretary, suggested that Ronald Reagan and Democratic contenders for the Presidency match the scope of Mr. Ford's financial disclosures.

Beame Considers Lifting Of Some Controls on Rent

By JOSEPH F. FRIED
The Beame administration is studying the possibility of removing from rent control apartments in the city that rent for $300 a month or more. There are about 15,000 rent-controlled apartments in that range, although officials say they do not know how many would be affected by any decontrol move that might result from the study.

Democrats Found More Conservative Than 4 Years Ago

By ROBERT REINHOLD
In the absence of such a galvanizing political issue as the war in Vietnam, Democratic voters this year, at least insofar as they are typified by the small minority of voters who have turned out in the early primaries, appear to have a more conservative hue than they did in 1972.

LONDON, April 20—Queen Elizabeth II, who celebrates her 50th birthday tomorrow, remains an enduring symbol of stability after the decline of Britain as a colonial power and the erosion of the nation's economic strength.

The Forest Hills Co-op, From Anger to Acceptance

Residents of the Forest Hills Cooperative at 108th Street and Long Island Expressway sitting and talking yesterday

In October, 1972, residents of the area went to City Hall to show their opposition to the project.

By FRANK J. PRIAL
On the night of Nov. 18, 1971, hundreds of angry, shouting Forest Hills residents stormed the site of a proposed housing project in their Queens neighborhood. Throwing rocks and flaming torches at construction trailers, they vowed that the project—designed to bring poor people into a middle-class area—would never be built.

Israeli Forces Wound 2 in a Battle With West Bank Students

JERUSALEM, April 20 (Reuters) — Israeli security forces shot and wounded two men in Nablus today as they fought a running battle with stone-throwing Arab students in the casbah, an Israeli spokesman said.

One of the men was reported to have been seriously injured when Israeli security forces opened fire as Arab students pelted them with stones from roofs overlooking the narrow streets of the market area.

The firing occurred in the same area where a 35-year-old Nablus resident was killed in a clash yesterday.

Earlier, foreign tourists were cleared from parts of the old city of Jerusalem as Israeli security forces battled with rioting students.

Reinforced troop units also broke up demonstrations in the towns of Jenin and Tulkarm as civil unrest continued throughout the occupied West Bank of the Jordan River.

Arab Schoolgirls March
After two weeks of quiet, in Jerusalem, about 200 Arab schoolgirls marched from the Damascus Gate of the old walled city toward Herod's Gate carrying wreaths with the ironic slogan: "Condolences to the occupation."

Policemen broke up the march but other youngsters then started throwing stones at a police patrol. Inside the city walls, another group set fire to automobile tires. Two policemen and a soldier in a private car were injured by stones and about 15 Arab youths were detained.

A shopkeepers' strike was held in many parts of the West Bank, but security men forced open closed shops by breaking the locks, according to villagers. The villagers said that most shopkeepers hurried back to their shops when they heard what was happening.

A tight curfew was clamped on Tulkarm this morning, and 19 demonstrators and curfew-violators were arrested and brought immediately to trial before military courts. The 19 were sentenced to prison terms of eight or nine months and fined up to $720.

The new wave of rioting this week followed two months of demonstrations in the West Bank earlier this year. The area calmed down during local elec-stirred up trouble such as Jericho to quiet.

The newspaper march had damaged reputation abroad, for firm action by Rabin to stop settlement meant a showdown with National Religious Party partner in the cabinet.

Rabin Tourist Agency Prime Minister toured the Jordan, and offered reasons for settlers' frustration set up there since 1967.

"These settlements stay for a long time," Rabin said. "We will build new villages only down later."

The Prime Minister said the settlements were from the beginning everything possible to strengthen them.

Wherever he was asked by them they should long-range plan that the Government made clear its plans for the region.

One farmer said settlers should begin to plant after seven or eight years, the Prime Minister said.

In an interview with a newspaper, Mr. Rabin said the Government was negotiating a settlement with the Jordan which would involve compromises in the Jordanian decision to be made by its peace with its but no agreement without the general election.

Officials said Rabin said five or six hundred families in the Jordan and 230 houses to the existing which have a of about 900.

Rhodesia Tightening Security Following Killings

SALISBURY, Rhodesia, April 20 (Reuters)—Rhodesian Cabinet ministers today pledged tighter security measures to protect tourists and a vital rail link with South Africa after attacks Sunday by African nationalist guerrillas in southeastern Rhodesia.

Three South African tourists were killed by the guerrillas and the key Rutenga railway line south was cut in a bomb attack.

The Rutenga railway was back in operation today, but the Beitbridge road—the main highway between Rhodesia and South Africa—remained closed while the troops hunted for the guerrillas.

Ely Broomberg, Minister of Information, Immigration and Tourism, voiced shock and anger over the killings and said further security measures were being introduced. As he spoke, troops combed the southeastern border area in a hunt for the guerrillas. The transport minister, Roger Hawkins, said that extra foot patrols might be added along the 80-mile rail route to the South African border.

French Unemployment Up
PARIS, April 20 (Reuters)—Unemployment in France rose to 851,700 in March from 825,000 in February on a seasonally adjusted basis. The Ministry of Labor said today. The ministry said the seasonal adjustment took into account exceptional labor market conditions in 1975 when France, like other major industrial countries, was badly hit by the recession.

Railroad official is alone with trains at the Shinagawa yard in Tokyo as transport union strike begins

's Public Transport Is Thrown Into Chaos as Rail Strike Begins

April 20 (Reuters) — Transport was thrown into chaos throughout the first three-day strike of workers. Union leaders warned today that new strikes could be called when the three-day stoppage ends. They said the new walkouts could last one day to a week. The rail workers are seeking wage increases of 10 percent or more. Normal activities in Tokyo were severely affected by the strike. Nearly half the schools were closed or sent their pupils home at noon. Only four department stores were open for business. Union leaders said little progress had been made in talks with railroad managements, but fresh negotiations were expected to be held during the night. Workers on the state-run Japan National Railways were awaiting the outcome of talks involving the privately operated railways. Workers on the private lines were reported to have been offered an increase of 8 percent but were said to be holding out for a 10 percent settlement.

Copy in Soviet, Jewish Teen-Ager in Dispute Says

VID K. SHIPLER — The New York Times, April 19 — Terrible shots were the Soviet mission to the United States in New York City, an unidentified source said. Several news items reported that Marina Tiemkin, a 16-year-old girl, was in the custody of the Soviet Embassy in New York. Her father, a physicist, Aleksandr Tiemkin, had decided to emigrate. Her mother, Maya M. Raiskaya, a psychiatrist, did not want to leave. On this issue, her mother said, the marriage broke up and precipitated a court battle for custody of Marina, then 13, their only child. "She wanted to emigrate with her father," recalled Lev A. Gendin, an automation engineer who is one of her father's friends and has also tried to go to Israel. "She studied Hebrew, she wore a Star of David—a large one. She sang Hebrew songs." In the autumn of 1972, Soviet authorities informed Mr. Tiemkin that he and his daughter would be issued emigration visas. But before the documents were ready, Mr. Gendin said, the courts found in the mother's favor, awarding her custody of Marina. The girl's visa authorization was withdrawn. In February 1973, according to Mr. Gendin's account, policemen entered Mr. Tiemkin's apartment, seized Mariana and took her to the Orlyonok Camp for Young Pioneers, a Communist youth organization, in the Caucasus. Dr. Raiskaya, Marina's mother, denied any police involvement. "Marina went to a pioneer camp as many children do in our country," she said. But Mr. Gendin offered a less innocent picture. He said he had slipped into the camp and talked for about 20 minutes with Marina before he was arrested and taken back to Moscow. "She succeeded in telling me that she was under very heavy pressure," he said. "They were persuading her to be anti-Israel. She said she would make it look as if she really had given in to this position, that she had forgotten Israel—but in fact she would do it just to stop their pressure against her." Her father tried to see her at the camp, too, Mr. Gendin recalled, and was also held by the police. He finally emigrated alone to Israel, where he is living now. But he is believed to still hold the hope that his daughter can join him, and some dissidents here speculate that his appeals have sparked the protests in New York. Many Jewish activists in Moscow are baffled that the protests, whose violence they condemn as counterproductive, have focused on this case when many other Jews who still want to leave have been blocked. No Trace of Ambivalence — Marina, tall and dark-eyed, shows no trace of ambivalence about her desire to stay in the Soviet Union. There is nothing in her clear-voiced answers that hints at uncertainty. She is a diligent student, her mother says, and a member of the Komsomol, the Communist organization for youths 14 to 28. After an American correspondent had asked to interview her daughter, Dr. Raiskaya took 10 days to give approval, and then only on the condition that Marina, who she said had suffered trauma and deep unhappiness over the events of three years ago, not be questioned about that period or about her father. "It would be very difficult for Marina to discuss these things with you," her mother said. As a result, the path Marina has traveled in the last three years remains in shadow. The wounds, the conflicts she may still feel remain well below the surface. "She was a child then," her mother said, "and she was not able to decide or think about such a complicated question as leaving her homeland. She grew up. She became aware that she should stay with her mother in her own country."

Bold Steps Urged to Overcome U.S. 'Disarray' in U.N.

By KATHLEEN TELTSCH — Special to The New York Times
UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., April 20—A group of scholars and Americans associated with the United Nations has concluded that American policy in the world organization is in a "state of unprecedented disarray" and called for a bold corrective strategy. In a report presented today to William W. Scranton, chief United States delegate, the group advocated measures to restore American influence in the world organization. Increased in recent years the United States has been on the losing end of votes in the General Assembly piled up by a majority of Communist and third-world countries. Tough Diplomatic Line Urged — Among its specific recommendations, the group said that the United States should boycott or withhold funds from "noxious" United Nations programs. It advised the United States to take a "tough" diplomatic line, demonstrating that it will listen to honest economic grievances but that "it would not be pushed." The United States was urged also to take the lead in fashioning a new "world order coalition" of like-minded states beginning with Western European allies, Japan and some of the developing countries to consult together and frame joint strategy. The group reporting to Mr. Scranton was made up of 16 participants with Richard N. Gardner, professor of international law at Columbia University and a former Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for International Organizations acting as spokesman. It included Seymour M. Finger, a former United States delegate to the United Nations, three former members of the Human Rights Commission—Morris B. Abram, Rita Hauser and Philip E. Hoffman—and John Carey, the alternate American representative on the commission's sub-commission against discrimination. Also in the group were Prof. Thomas M. Franck of New York University, Prof. Hans Morgenthau of the City University, and Prof. Thomas Buergenthal of the University of Texas. Others were Charles William Maynes, secretary of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace; Nathan Pelcovits, a former policy planner of the State Department; Norman Cousins, publisher and writer; Leo Nevas of the United Nations Association for the United Nations; Jerome Shestack, president of the International League for the Rights of Man; and Sidney Liskofsky and Bertram M. Gold, both of the American Jewish Committee. Project Begun in 1974 — Mr. Gardner said that the participants had begun their project in 1974 after the General Assembly received Yasir Arafat, leader of the Palestine Liberation Organization, with honors usually reserved for a head of state, an act that was widely attacked in this country and further diminished American confidence in the United Nations. The report, entitled "A New United States Policy Toward the United Nations," was offered to Mr. Scranton as guidance for the State Department at a time when its policies are under review, Mr. Gardner said. One of its major criticisms was that the Government tends to conduct United Nations policy as if were in a separate box unrelated to direct relations between Washington and other capitals. This has led to harmful inconsistencies, the report said.

Turn in India's Foreign Policy

By WILLIAM BORDERS
Special to The New York Times

NEW DELHI, April 20—Behind a high and forbidding bright red gate in New Delhi's elegant diplomatic enclave stands a squat stone building that has for years been a monument to a painful international estrangement—the all-but-deserted Embassy of China.

A few hundred yards away on the other side of the embassy row, on a broad boulevard named Shantipath (Road of Peace), stands another reminder of war—the purple-domed Embassy of Pakistan, which now has the Swiss flag flying over it, since no Pakistanis were left in charge.

The Pakistanis packed up and went home in 1971, as they plunged into their third war with India. The Chinese had departed nearly 10 years earlier, leaving only a skeleton staff, as they slid toward a war of their own with the Indians.

But all up and down Shantipath today, among the diplomatic neighbors of those embassies, there was speculation about the possibility of new activity behind the walls of the two compounds, as people here puzzled over what looked like a startling turn in Indian foreign policy.

Two Major Actions

Within a period of four days, India announced that it was exchanging ambassadors with China, and that it had offered to reopen negotiations toward resuming diplomatic relations with Pakistan.

Among diplomats and knowledgeable Indians, the one-two diplomatic offensive raised these major questions:

Q Were the two moves related in any way, or was it just chance that placed them only a few days apart?

Q Individually or collectively, do they represent a sincere Indian move toward a new international policy, or are they just part of the tide of words that seems as regular in South Asia as the monsoon?

Q What relation, if any, do these external overtures have to what Prime Minister Indira Gandhi calls the domestic emergency, in the name of which she has suspended civil liberties and jailed tens of thousands of her opponents?

Q There's really no easy answer to any of that," a European diplomat said, expressing a common view. "There might be some changes coming, or there might not. We'll just have to wait and see."

Indian Government sources said that there was no direct connection between the two overtures, a contention supported by the fact that the timing of the improvement in the relationship with Peking was really more China's choice than India's.

China and Pakistan Moves Hint a New Mood of Amity

For more than a year, India had been angling for the resumption of relations at the ambassadorial level.

Even after External Affairs Minister Y B Chavan disclosed the agreement last Thursday in parliament, the Chinese pointedly said that their new ambassador would be dispatched to New Delhi only "after the Indian ambassador is sent to China."

In one widely held view here, a principal reason for the Indians' eagerness was a desire to move a bit out from under the shadow of the Soviet Union, their closest big-power ally, or at least to show Moscow a bit of independence.

The Russians here have not made any public response to the move, and privately they are playing down its importance. But it is generally thought here that the news of better relations between New Delhi and Peking must have caused some distress in Moscow.

Knowledgeable observers, however, cautioned against attaching too much importance to the exchange of ambassadors, or expecting too much from it, in terms of South Asian stability.

There are still a whole lot of problems between these two countries, and putting a couple of new chaps in at the top isn't going to solve them right away," a diplomat said.

The barren Himalayan frontier between China and India, the issue over which they went to war in 1962, is still as much in dispute today as it was then. And the Indians also charge the Chinese with aiding insurgents in the eastern border territories of Mizoram and Nagaland.

The two countries are also rivals for the allegiance of Bhutan and Nepal, the independent states along their border, and for the friendship of Bangladesh, whose violent change of government last year altered several of the power relationships in South Asia.

Similarly, the gesture toward Pakistan, which Prime Minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto promptly reciprocated, is many steps away from a conclusive agreement.

Under the Simla accord that Prime Ministers Bhutto and Gandhi reached in 1972, the resumption of diplomatic relations would come only after agreement on a range of complicated subjects including overflights and land communications.

Those subjects now apparently will at least be discussed, at meetings that are

Ruling Parties Win In Colombian Vote, With Turnout Light

BOGOTA, Colombia, April 20 (Reuters)—Colombia's governing coalition of Liberal and Conservative parties overwhelmed Communist factions in last Sunday's local elections, according to official figures made public today.

However, the elections were marked by voter apathy, with only 20 percent of the 10 million registered voters casting their ballots.

With 31.3 percent of the votes counted, the Liberal Party, senior partner in the coalition with the Conservatives, had gained 50.06 percent of the votes.

The Conservatives won 41.5 percent, with 3.82 percent for the National Popular Alliance and 2.75 percent for the Communist-led National Opposition Union. The other votes went to a Maoist group.

The former Liberal President, Carlos Lleras Restrepo, who is seeking the 1978 presidential candidacy to succeed President Alfonso López Michelsen, won more than 60 percent of the Liberal votes cast in the capital.

However, he appeared to have lost ground in rural areas to Julio César Turbay Ayala, Colombia's Ambassador to Washington, who is also seeking the 1978 Liberal Party nomination for president.

U.S. and Nigeria Agree To Share Lockheed Data

WASHINGTON, APRIL 20 (AP)—The United States and Nigeria signed an agreement today providing for the sharing of any information uncovered in investigations of allegedly illicit payments by the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation.

Nigeria's chief purchase from Lockheed in recent years was six C-130 aircraft.

In the agreement, the two countries pledged their best efforts to make available to each other information concerning "the sales activities in Nigeria of Lockheed and its subsidiaries or affiliates."

The United States has signed similar agreements recently with Japan, Italy and the Netherlands.

China and Pakistan Moves Hint a New Mood of Amity

expected to take place in Islamabad, the Pakistani capital. But the hostility between Pakistan and India is charged by strains of the kind of familial hatred that grows out of having once been the same country.

In both Pakistan and India, there are still millions of people who bitterly remember growing up on the other side.

Whether the timing of the diplomatic moves was coincidental or not, they have created an image of a conciliatory India and are responsive to a desire in Government circles here to get back to the days when India was the leader of the third world.

Prime Minister Gandhi is known to be deeply disturbed at the unfavorable comparisons many Westerners have drawn between her and her father, former Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru, especially in the 10 months since she embarked on a stern new course for the democracy that he helped to create nearly 30 years ago.

"Spirit of Nehru" Any move toward better relations with India's Asian neighbors is in what an official described as "the spirit of Nehru," a peaceful man who detested the partition of India, which created Pakistan, and who once said of China:

"The future of which I dream is inextricably interwoven with close friendship and something almost approaching union with China."

Last summer, when the state of emergency was declared, in the face of what Prime Minister Gandhi called "a grave internal threat," some people predicted a military offensive by India, to deflect criticism from the harsh new domestic position.

But now such military action ensued, and now some of those same people are talking about the possibility of deflecting domestic criticism with an overture of peace.

In the new domestic political order in India, with Mrs. Gandhi's personal power greatly enhanced, she is now able to undertake initiatives in foreign policy or other areas that might have been impossible a year ago. Her overture toward Pakistan, for example, would very likely have attracted a barrage of criticism from the Jan Sangh Party, a militant Hindu group. But now its leaders and many of its middle-level workers are in jail, among the thousands of political prisoners, and sympathizers who are at liberty are reluctant to attack the Gandhi administration on this or any other point.

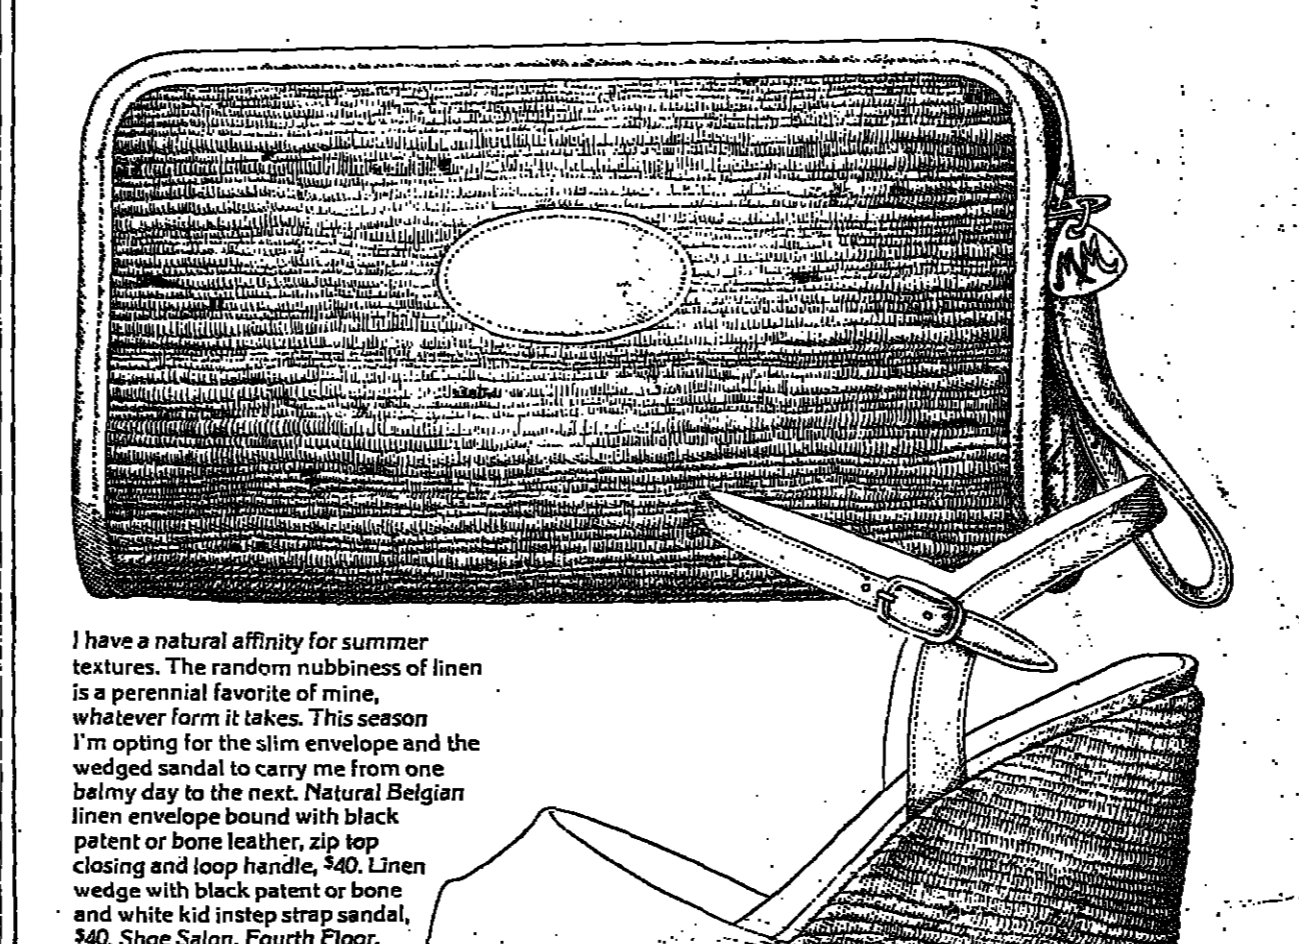

Particularly with the approach of the conference of nonaligned nations scheduled for Sri Lanka in August, India is actively seeking a world leadership role and mending fences at home is a logical step in that direction.

Your Dad shows up in his Mark of the Lion separates. But when you say "What shall I wear?" they tell you "Just pop on some dungarees, dear."

Smacks of downright discrimination, doesn't it? But, until today, that's the way it had to be. This morning is the dawning of a new era called "More fashion fun for kids" and Altman's is right up front in the movement. Starting today, your girl can show off her own signature separates. Each piece boldly, brightly signed with the name of her own favorite designer, Betsy Daniels.

Unlike most designers, Betsy Daniels has two great interests. First come children. Second comes fashion. This means she knows exactly how to adapt today's big fashion looks to little figures.

Everything's in a carefree, crinkly "earth cloth" cotton. And all these coordinates, created for the Doodle Bug company, come in sunny yellow or bright red.

A Shaky New Cease-Fire Begins in Beirut

By JAMES M. MARKHAM
Special to The New York Times

BEIRUT, Lebanon, Wednesday, April 21—Lebanon's 28th day of a year started yesterday, with shelling, sniping and a few ground attacks reported from the charred port area and eastern suburbs. The cease-fire, which should have gone into effect at midnight, showed little sign of holding and by evening a reconstituted committee of Syrian, Palestinian and Lebanese officers and factional chiefs was unable to deploy a peace-keeping force on either side of the city's political divide.

In 24 hours, according to some accounts, 110 people have been killed in Beirut and the nearby mountains, where rival sides have been bombarding each other with artillery.

A meeting of the so-called Higher Military Committee, formed under Syrian aegis in January and then disbanded last month, was delayed from morning to afternoon because of the funeral of a grandson of the Christian right-wing Phalangist Party, who was said to have been killed in the fighting.

Rightist representatives at the meeting reportedly asked Palestinian representatives about "secret agreements" reached between the Palestine Liberation Organization and Damascus last week.

Salah Khalaf, the second-ranking official in Al Fatah, a Palestinian organization, was said to have responded that the two sides had reached an "understanding" that a free election should take place to pick a successor to President Suleiman Franjeh, whose ouster has been widely demanded.

Palestinian representatives were said to have issued a warning to the rightists, saying that night would be a test of their goodwill.

Fighting and shelling centered on the downtown port area, where a huge fire burned out of control. Shortly before midnight, the level of fighting tapered off on some fronts.

Mortar shells were reported to have struck the buildings housing the Bank of America and the French-owned Banque de l'Industrie et du Travail, and fires burned in neighboring buildings. Well-organized gangs have pillaged a dozen Beirut banks during the conflagration.

Armed thugs have taken to dragging people out of their cars in broad daylight and making off with their automobiles. Last night, a correspondent of The Toronto Star, Gerald Utting, was reported to have been dragged away by armed men while on his way to Beirut's airport.

The Phalangist radio accused partisans of the left-wing "rejection front," which is backed by Iraq and Libya, of pressing the downtown offensive, but there was no way of confirming which side had initiated the fighting.

ARMS SALE TO ARABS ASSAILED BY ABZUG

Representative Bella S. Abzug said yesterday that the United States should "stop acting as the major arms seller to the Persian Gulf nations" and should "drop its long-range plans to sell arms to Egypt."

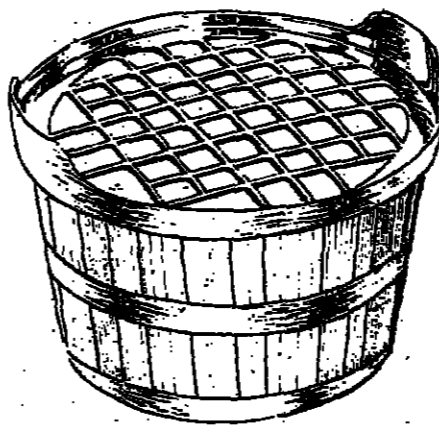

Speaking before a group of 50 at a luncheon of the Overseas Press Club in the Hotel Biltmore, she denounced the Ford Administration for providing arms to nations "which seek to upset the stability of the Middle East."

"If Israel is expected to follow up the Sinai pact with further concessions, it has a right to expect that the U.S. will stop selling arms to its present and potential enemies," she said, adding that, from 1973 to '76, military sales to Persian Gulf countries had exceeded $12 billion, while such sales to Israel were only $5 billion.

Insisting that such a reduction in Middle East arms sales should be part of "a reappraisal of foreign policy," the Congresswoman said she also believed the United States had a responsibility to give economic assistance "to the people of Vietnam for the horrors we inflicted on them."

Saudis Putting a Billion Into Riyadh U.

By ERIC PACE
Special to The New York Times
RIYADH, Saudi Arabia — Saudi Arabia, which has had Western-style college-level education only since 1957, is to spend well over $1 billion on expanding Riyadh University between now and late 1980, according to a university administrator.

"Spending all that money is a headache and you have to worry about it all the time," the university's secretary general, Salem A. Melibary, said in an interview, adding, "this is the biggest educational project in human history to be executed at one time."

Saudi Arabia's 1975-80 development plan, as drafted last year, provides for more than $1.2 billion in expenditures for the university, which now has 7,000 students. But Dr. Melibary said that total spending in the period would be roughly $2 billion.

The bulk of the money is to go to build a whole new university campus near the village of Deraya, seven miles north-west of this inland capital. Work has already begun on the college of medicine building and on temporary sports facilities, and housing construction is to begin soon.

In addition, the campus near Deraya, which was the capital of the first Saudi state in the 18th century, is to have a wide variety of facilities ranging from a college of pharmacy to a private bus line to shuttle students and teachers back and forth from other university buildings in Riyadh proper.

Many Departments Planned
The many other new university departments that are to be founded and housed between now and late 1980 include statistical analysis, vocational education, astronomy, linguistics and phonetics, experimental psychology, agronomy and, among other exotics, modern European languages.

In addition, the Deraya campus is to have an elegant library building as headquarters for a 4-million-volume university library system that is to be built up by the mid-1980's. The system has 350,000 volumes already.

"Talking in the library room is not a problem," observed the deputy dean of the University's library system, Najj, who was interviewed in the silent main university building.

One reason for this scholarly hush is that, in this conservative Islamic society, female students are not allowed to read in library rooms where male students are reading, although Dr. Nazer, a British-trained geologist, suggested that in some distant future the system might change.

Already there are more than 1,000 women in the student body, which is to rise to 7,700 by the end of 1980, Dr. Melibary told a visitor to his office here while sipping a tiny cup of Arabian coffee.

"That's a surprise, even for me," said Mr. Melibary — the university's third-ranking administrator, after the rector and vice rector. Their jobs include reconciling the need for educating women with the demands of Arabian traditions, including segregation of the sexes.

Hostels Are Well Apart
Thus, Dr. Melibary reported, the university has already provided a hostel building in Riyadh for women students who do not live with their families—but it is set well away from the men's hostel.

Founded in 1957, the university has already blossomed under a gentle rain of oil revenues, which have been pouring into this sparsely inhabited monarchy at well over $20 billion a year.

THE MAN BEATEN BY BOSTON BLACKS

Skull Fracture in Racial Incident—
Youths Arrested

By JOHN KIFNER
Special to The New York Times
BOSTON, April 20—A white man lay critically injured in a hospital as a result of a racial incident that left the city tense and jittery, as he was dragged from his car at night in the black neighborhood by a group of youths who beat him and smashed his head.
The white man, 34-year-old Robert Poleet, was in the in-care unit of the Boston hospital, listed in poor condition and on the danger list. He had a fractured skull, facial lacerations and extensive facial bruising, the hospital said.
In the afternoon, the police arrested two black youths in connection with the beating and charged them with assault with intent to murder and robbery. Mr. Poleet's car was stolen during the beating.
One of those arrested, a 17-year-old juvenile, the police identified as Randy B. The police said they were seeking other suspects.
Kevin H. White met with police advisers and ranking officials, then held a press conference in which he said the beating "despicable" and "excusable."

The attack came two weeks after a black lawyer was beaten by white youths on a street in front of Boston City Hall and badly beaten American flag. It was part of a series of racial incidents that night and over the past few days. Racial antagonisms have been evident here over the last few days during court-ordered desegregation of a school. Police and city officials are clearly worried about rising tensions in the white neighborhood. Poleet was struck with a brick in a cinder block the day before he was taken to the emergency room, where police and doctors were unable to save his face.

Racial incidents last week included the blockading of a subway train by youths who piled debris on it and then threw rocks at the crew. There were also incidents of stonings of a bus by blacks, and a black man fractured three ribs when he fell off a ladder after being hit by rocks thrown by youths.

A transit bus driver in South Boston was beaten by white youths on Saturday for the Bay Transit Authority black and three other blacks were also beaten when they attempted to aid the driver Friday night, in the East Boston neighborhood, there were two reported incidents of blacks being beaten by white youths near a subway station.

Police last night warned that an incident in South Boston, a black man who was beaten in the bus stop, that case, a black man was dragged from his car until the police arrived.

Commissioner Robert F. Healy issued a statement saying: "What happened last night was a surprise. It is a racial incident, not a racial riot. That is an atmosphere that leads to incidents like this."

At the hour, City Councilman Day Elicks, a major voice of the city's antibusing movement, was reading a statement in City Hall attacking the busing. "Melvin Bell has been a spokesman for his position on the school issue. He has been close to the streets, thrown by stones, Mrs. Bell just wonder if you can now that a racial incident, scream of pain, has been in the streets of his city with the spilled blood."

He attributed the attack on the bus, which this city fertile such brutality. "along with other people, denounced the busing. This kind of violence cannot be tolerated. We certainly insist on a more aggressive approach that goes against white violence taken in this and other instances of violence."

At noon there was an incident in a city jail on Dear Street. Police Superintendent Jordan and the police were called to the incident. A Boston Globe reported that it was announced that it was a racial incident. A Boston Globe reported that it was a racial incident. A Boston Globe reported that it was a racial incident.

Elizabeth II, at 50, Is a Symbol of Stability

seems a source of fantasy and irrelevance.

"I think the monarch means absolutely nothing," said the social commentator Malcolm Muggeridge. "The relevance of an institution is directly related to its power. When you have no power you wither on the branch, and the monarch has no power whatsoever."

"I suppose it does have a ceremonial function," he added. "After all, it frees the Prime Minister from the boring business of entertaining and meeting obscure potentates. The American President seems to spend an inordinate amount of time doing that. Here it's foisted off on the royal family."

'Living Actors in a Museum'
Willie Hamilton, a Labor Party Member of Parliament who has consistently criticized the royal family, said in an interview: "The attitude in the country is still one of amused indifference to them. People feel the monarchy does no harm—a fairly negative assumption—and, like the weather, we can't do anything about it."

Mr. Hamilton, the son of a coal miner, added: "I believe the monarchy and its privileges are immoral, and buttressed by the British people's apathy and love of tradition. In my own view the whole institution will die of boredom. They're like living actors in a museum, a symbol of decadence."

Perhaps some of the most pointed criticism in recent years came from Andrew Duncan, a 35-year-old writer whose book, "The Reality of Monarchy," was published after he spent a year following the royal family and speaking to most of its members—a rare opportunity.

His conclusions, which slung the royal family, were that the Queen could insist on "more reality," with short-notice trips to hospitals and factories; with a "positive lead" on such problems as racial discrimination; with faster, less ritualized state visits; with more television appearances; and with duties that identify her with present-day Britain.

"The dilemma is, once you start to shred away the mystique, then the fairy tale quality disappears and you have very little left," Mr. Duncan told a visitor. "There's no point. The Queen herself has a very rigid sense of duty and correctness, and what is correct is distance and formality. Actually, there's so little that she's done or said that's captured anyone's imagination."

Little Change in Routine
By all accounts the Queen, who is the 63d British monarch in a line going back 1,000 years, has endured nearly 25 years of her reign with minimal personal criticism and with her private life concealed behind a routine that has barely changed since her ascension in 1952 upon the death of her father, George VI.

A typical week for Elizabeth would include a charity film premiere, several state banquets, visits to universities and hospitals, the opening of an exhibition hall or a museum, a visit to an artillery regiment, a reception for a group of lawyers or scientists from abroad, and briefings on Tuesday by the Prime Minister.

In theory, the Queen has the right both to dissolve Parliament and to choose the Prime Minister, but since 1985 both parties that have been in power have been able to present the monarch with their choice of leaders, thus effectively thwarting her from making a decision in the event of the death of a Prime Minister. The last king to dismiss a Prime Minister was William IV, in 1834.

Unlike her father, who said he had influenced Clement Attlee to appoint Ernest Bevin as Foreign Secretary in 1945, or Queen Victoria and other ancestors, Elizabeth II has shown no inclination to exert political leverage.

Nonetheless, Elizabeth, as temporal head of the Church of England and Commander of the Armed Services, takes her role in Government seriously. Twice a day, morning and evening, she receives Foreign Office telegrams and reports and Cabinet documents. She is said to be blunt and informed.

Insights Are 'Devastating'
"Ambassadors off on a new posting get devastating—and often irreverent—insights into the foreign leaders they are dealing with, for she has met most of them personally," said Robert Lacey, author of a book about the Queen to be published next year.

Former Prime Minister Harold Wilson, who developed a warm friendship with the Queen, said at his recent farewell dinner with her at 10 Downing Street: "I certainly advise my successor to do his homework before his audience or he will feel like an unprepared schoolboy."

Officials at Buckingham Palace maintain that the Queen, especially in recent years, has sought to narrow the distance between herself and the public. There are "walkabouts" or informal street meetings; there are garden parties in summer attended by hundreds of civil servants and invited guests, and there are Christmas television speeches in relaxed settings.

Moreover, the Queen and Prince Philip decided to educate their four children in schools and not use private tutors, a move that allowed the children to meet commoners.

It is a measure of the times, however, that the British public has shown increased tolerance toward critics of the royal family. In the 1950's, for example, John Grigg, a historian and author, who was then Lord Altrincham, mildly objected to the Queen's voice and had his face slapped in public.

Mr. Muggeridge offered some criticism in the Saturday Evening Post and was banned from the BBC and labeled a "traitor" by Sir Gerald Beadle, director of television broadcasting.

Mr. Grigg says now: "There was an attitude to be totally uncritical, which is never healthy. She was exposed to such a barrage of adulation. If the 50's were in the main too deferential, the 60's were too iconoclastic."

"For the Queen this was a time of trial, but she survived it gloriously," he went on. "A less steady character would have succumbed in one of two ways: Either by joining the large number of established figures who allowed themselves to be drawn into the trendy rat race, or by retreating into a morose but comfortable isolation."

"Instead, she has kept an almost perfect balance between stability and change."

He added, in an interview: "The family are the outward and visible signs of the nation's distinctiveness and history. They give a three-dimensional feeling to the nation. They make us vividly aware of the continuum of natural life, and vicariously convey to the public the feeling of an ancient community, which is coherent through time."

The Royal Family's Money
Perhaps the most delicate source of criticism, unthinkable a decade ago, is the amount of the royal budget, or Civil List, which was increased by Parliament last year to about $2.8 million to meet the impact of inflation.

With the criticism that the royal family is spending too much money, there is a debate going on about the revenue, the expenditure and the property of the monarchy. Critics insist that the archy's finances represent one of its most obscure corners.

Several years ago, Buckingham Palace denounced as "wild" an estimate that the Queen's fortune amounted to anything from $100 million to $200 million. The palace indicated that the figure was closer to $4 to $5 million.

Even among the staunchest critics, however, few insist that the monarchy should be abolished.

"People must understand that royalty exists to make reality bearable by turning it into an elaborate game," wrote the late Nicholas Tomalin, one of Britain's most prominent journalists, who died in the 1973 Middle East war.

"Only when smothered in flummery and nonsense can we examine the conflicts of real life with the necessary calmness and detachment," he wrote.

"This kind of wisdom, learned over so many centuries, is what makes our national institution so devious, so formal and so successful."

CHINA ASSAILS U.S. ON ITS EAST POLICY

PEKING, April 20 (Agence France-Presse) — China today labeled the so-called Sonnenfeldt doctrine a "doctrine of superpower division of spheres of influence."

The Chinese attack on the views of the State Department counselor, Helmut Sonnenfeldt, was made indirectly through the publication by the Pinyinua press agency of various articles on positions taken by foreign figures and press media.

The press agency devoted a long report to condemnations of the position put forward last December at a London meeting of United States ambassadors. In a speech, Mr. Sonnenfeldt expressed Washington's hope that the Soviet Union and its East European allies could develop an "organizational relationship based on other than Soviet military power."

Quoting from American, West German, French and British newspapers, Hsinhua said:

"It was pointed out that the speech was aimed at carving up spheres of influence between the superpowers and constituted a further development of the appeasement policy the United States has followed toward the Soviet Union."

Moynihan Begins State Political Tour

By MAURICE CARROLL
Daniel Patrick Moynihan has begun a low-key tour of New York State's political and civic power centers that his friends expect will end with a formal announcement of his long-rumored candidacy for the Democratic nomination for United States Senator.

His path will be cleared, unofficially and discreetly, by Joseph F. Crangle, leader of Erie County's Democratic organization, who is fresh from successful promotion in the state's Presidential primary of the undeclared candidacy of Hubert H. Humphrey.

Mr. Moynihan, former United States representative at the United Nations and co-author of a much-praised book on New York City's ethnic groups, met here with Mr. Crangle the other night for an informal survey of the state's political terrain. He also chatted with labor leaders. A planned courtesy call was deferred when it came to the attention of reporters.

"A Humphrey-Moynihan ticket," Mr. Crangle mused yesterday. "Now that would be a very strong ticket."

Opponent for Buckley

Mr. Crangle suggested that Mr. Moynihan would be good for the party, and some other politicians suggested that he would be good for Mr. Crangle, who, more and more, is establishing the sort of power wielded as state Democratic chairman before Governor Carey ousted him.

The party's mainstream politicians have been floundering in their quest for a candidate against the Conservative-Republican incumbent, James L. Buckley. The sponsor of a successful nominee would gain both power and prestige.

Most regulars do not take kindly to the candidacies of the liberal Ramsey Clark, former United States Attorney General, who has declared, or Representative Bella S. Abzug, who says she will declare soon. Many do not take seriously the candidacies, already declared, of Abraham Hirschfeld, a wealthy businessman, or Assemblyman Andrew J. Stein.

Mr. Moynihan's oratory at the United Nations made him a favorite in the Jewish community, a sizable and influential block in any Democratic primary in New York. But he does not begin his pre-declaration tour totally without political liabilities.

He was regarded as a lackadaisical, unpredictable campaigner in his one previous try for office, when he sought the Democratic nomination for City Council President in 1965. His service in the White House under President Nixon and in the United Nations under President Ford make him suspect to some liberals.

He is also "unacceptable" to some black officials. One reason, according to City Clerk David Dinkins, of the Council of Black Elected Democrats, is his views on the Negro family as reflected in the family-polluter with Mr. Moynihan the party's mainstream politicians have been floundering other night. In Mr. Gothaum's in their quest for a candidate self-described role as "not Es-against the Conservative-Re-establishment," he let it be publican incumbent, James L. known, although Mr. Moynihan never asked for his support in so many words, that he would not work for a Moynihan candidacy.

Another Moynihan plus, according to politicians who would like him to run, is his speaking style. He is seen as an exceptionally witty man, and, along with other traits, practices politics like a good showman.

"A Moynihan-Buckley campaign," said Mr. Crangle, "would be a delightful campaign."

Mr. Buckley faces a primary challenge from Representative Peter A. Peyser of Westchester County. The field of Democratic candidates is to expand on Friday with a formal declaration by City Council President Paul O'Dwyer. Also letting it be known that he would run if he could get widespread party support is Representative Mario Biaggi of the Bronx.

These days we are all concerned with saving money. But, while smart men look to save, they don't sacrifice quality. Here at BFO, we know that quality clothing is less expensive than clothing.

The reasons are obvious. Expensive clothing looks just as good later as the day you bought it.

You get better tailoring, so it fits better. Construction is softer, clothing molds itself gently to your body.

There's no question. Expensive clothing is the least expensive. Especially at BFO.

BONWIT TELLER

Many-Sided Economic Crisis Attracts As Many Cures as Lisbon Has Parties

LISBON, April 20—The key issue in the Portuguese elections next Sunday is what to do about the economy.

Portugal is faced by a serious balance-of-payments problem and a drop in production, as well as inflation, unemployment and social agitation.

Each of the major political parties has presented a program for solving the economic crises, and is asking for a vote of confidence.

The Socialist platform calls for a "reconstruction" of the national economy, emphasizing the need to establish the rules of the game. They insist that the "errors and abuses" of the controversial agrarian reform program be corrected and that the public and private sectors be clearly defined. The Socialists stress their close ties with the rest of Europe and its promises of economic assistance and cooperation.

'Defenders,' Reds Say
The Communists, on the other hand, insist that they are the "defenders of the achievements of the revolution"—the labor gains, nationalizations, agrarian reform. They call for development of the public sector, advancement of the agrarian reform program and a wage-price policy that would favor workers.

The Popular Democrats demand profound changes in the economy, insisting that they are against both capitalism and Marxism, but favor a mixed economy. They want the agrarian reform laws revoked and new legislation worked out with the participation of the farmers. They defend "socially useful" private initiative and property.

The Social Democratic Center presents itself as a party of competent technicians. It is the only big party that is not part of the Government coalition. The centrists openly oppose the country's socialist trend and favor a free-market economy. They are fervent defenders of private enterprise, calling for certain "denationalizations" and a suspension of the agrarian reform law.

The smaller parties offer a greater variety of platforms. The Maoist sister parties, the Marxist-Leninist Communist Party of Portugal and the Worker-Peasant Alliance, devote most of their programs to attacking the "social-fascists," as they call the orthodox Communists.

The third Maoist party, the Movement for the Reorganization of the Proletariat Party, equally denounces the "imperialists and the social-imperialists"—their name for the Communists—and calls for the dismantling of all bases used by foreign nations. This includes the American and French bases in the Azores. The Popular Democratic Union, believed to be the only far-leftist party that has a chance of winning one or two seats in the National Assembly, demands that Portugal pull out of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, reject all United States loans and ally itself with the third world.

The other far-leftist parties emphasize, in different degrees, "peoples power" and the politicizing of the armed forces. These are the radical socialist Popular Socialist Front, the Movement of the Socialist Left, the Trotskyist Internationalist Communist League and Revolutionary Workers Party.

The small rightist parties the Christian Democrats and the Popular Monarchists, like the Social Democratic Center, have vigorously attacked the Government's socialist moves as well as decolonization since the Revolution of April 25, 1974.

The decolonization of Portuguese Africa is a prime election issue. Half a million colonial refugees are bitterly condemning the Government parties for not defending their interests.

Captain of Mayaguez Seeks Return of Marines' Remains

MANILA, April 20 (UPI)—The captain of the United States cargo ship Mayaguez said today that he wanted to meet with the Cambodian Deputy Prime Minister, Teng Sary, and request the return of the remains of two marines killed during the battle to recover his ship last year.

Capt. Charles Miller, when the Mayaguez docked at Manila, said that he was making the move on his own initiative and had not been asked to do so by relatives of the men. He also refused to disclose the names of the two marines.

Captain Miller said the two were among those killed when marines stormed an island during the battle after the Mayaguez was seized by Cambodian Communist forces.

Portugal's Parties Vying for Voters

government, counting on the abstention of the Communists or other sectors of the Parliament to push through their program of national reconstruction. Both the Communists and the Popular Democrats have warned that they will not give a Socialist Government support without a formal accord on the program, which implies an alliance.

In the absence of a clearcut Socialist victory, the prospects are cloudy. A victory by the two parties to the right of the Socialists, the Popular Democrats and the Centralists, is increasingly possible and could spell new instability. The Socialists and the Communists, which control labor, could be thrown into the opposition together, which would undoubtedly mean more social agitation.

Coalition a Possibility
Finally, if there is no possible majority, the only alternative is another coalition government similar to the present one, which includes the Socialists, Popular Democrats, Communists, military and independents. This coalition has been unable to tackle basic problems largely because of internal disagreement, which at times has deteriorated into open opposition.

The campaign itself has been fierce, with probably more casualties than in the two years of Portugal's nonviolent revolution. The main parties have all denounced the campaign violence and called for calm, but all of them have been victims of assaults.

The situation became so Lisbon, Antonio Cardinal Ribeiro, spoke out last week condemning the acts of violence "which insult human dignity and profoundly injure the Christian conscience."

Terrorist bomb attacks have caused widespread damage, particularly to Communist and other leftist property, and resulted in the death of a priest, who was candidate for a far-leftist party, and a 19-year-old leftist militant.

'Poster War' Is On
The "poster war," or conflicts between zealous party militants vying for wall space, has taken the lives of many more. Poster hangers go in teams and are usually armed with knives or guns.

Party rallies are increasingly rough. The Communists have been insulted and stoned in some conservative areas in the north, while the Popular Democrats and Centralists have been stoned and insulted in leftist strongholds in the south. And the Socialists have received stones and insults from the left and the right.

The arch-conservatives of Portugal's Madeira and Azores islands, who want independence, have attacked almost all the politicians from the mainland. They have held Communist witch-hunts, thrown eggs and tomatoes at the Socialists, attacked the Popular Democrats and even planted a bomb for the Prime Minister, which went off too soon.

The Military Council of the Revolution, which is still the ruling body until the National Assembly is in place, has condemned the political violence and asserted that it will use

"all possible means" to guarantee free elections.

Demonstrating their pledge, the authorities put on a major show of force last week to protect a conservative rally in the Communist stronghold of Beja, southeast of here. They took their preventive action after incidents following a Popular Democrat rally last weekend had left one dead and more than a score of wounded.

Some 600 riot policemen and national guardsmen with horses and armored cars formed a protective cordon around the Beja bullring, where about 300 supporters of the Social Democratic Center were gathered, most of them based in from Lisbon and Oporto. The Beja artillery regiment and the cavalry regiment at Estremoz, to the north, were also put on the alert. The rally ended without incident, but downtown, angry leftists stoned cars they thought belonged to Centralists, injuring four persons.

"The bullring is empty out of fear, this fear made people stay in their houses," Gen. Carlos Galvao de Melo, Social Democratic Center deputy and probable Presidential candidate, declared, stressing that this was "a fundamental problem we must solve."

Communists Threatened
But the popular general has himself been guilty of violent attitudes, threatening to "drive the Communists into the sea" at a conservative farmers' rally and waving a cudgel, which has become the party's trademark.

On the whole, the parties have used traditional campaign methods, which are still a novelty to this aspiring democracy. Election posters have been put up everywhere, on public monuments, churches, private homes, on walls and trees in the remotest villages.

The Communists are acknowledged to be the grand winners of the poster offensive, getting to the best places first with the most posters. Their graphic art features innocent children and slogans defending liberty all in the national colors of red and green.

Just as widespread are painted slogans. Here the extreme leftist parties, which cannot afford many posters, excel. The conservative party's new popularity drive is also visible with painted signs on the walls and highways of the leftist Alentejo district calling for "peace, love and progress."

Parties Hold Briefings
A less visible but important part of the campaign are the briefings that all of the parties hold in cities and villages throughout the country.

"There's where we tell the people what socialism means on the national and local level," Mario Soares, a 74-year-old Socialist militant, said. The sessions are open and often end in sharp debate with rival party militants.

The Socialists were accused of using "American tactics" in their campaign, when they introduced drum majorettes and brass bands at a rally in Oporto.

Mr. Soares is actually a firm believer in personal contact and has barnstormed the country's 23 districts by plane, train and motorcade.

will spend their evenings in village cafes watching the screen with fascination.

The authorities have scrupulously divided TV and radio propaganda time among the 14 parties. At the same time, they have barred news coverage of even the biggest rallies put on by the major parties.

This puts parties like the Maoist Worker-Peasant Alliance, with an estimated 300 members, on the same footing as the Communist Party, with a claimed membership of 120,000.

This is the reason why the extreme leftist parties, which condemn "bourgeois democracy" are taking part in the election.

In Portugal, as in other countries, the personal image of the party leaders has a lot to do with the party's popularity and could be more important than platforms in the way people vote.

The four big vote getters are: Mr. Soares of the Socialists; Francisco Sá Carneiro of the Popular Democrats; Diogo Freitas do Amaral of the Centralists; and Alvaro Cunhal of the Communists.

Mr. Soares is a 51-year-old lawyer who spent most of his life fighting against the former right-wing dictatorship and has led the struggle against a Communist takeover in Portugal. He is an easy-going, expansive politician who comes alive in a crowd.

Also a lawyer, Mr. Sá Carneiro, 40, was considered a liberal under the old right-wing regime and tried to bring about change from within as a deputy for the official party. Reserved and sometimes dogmatic, he appeals more to small intellectual groups than to the crowd.

The Communist secretary general, Mr. Cunhal, 62, acquired his prestige from long years in prison and exile. However, those years have made him suspicious, secretive about his personal life and reticent in crowds.

Mr. Freitas do Amaral, 34, was a man of the old regime, a university professor and a friend of former Prime Minister Marcello Caetano, now living in exile in Brazil. He appears every inch a congenial but a strict disciplinarian.

al Electric and 2 Unions in Talks for Key Contracts

By DAMON STETSON
The electrical unions... Albert J. Fitzgerald, president of the United Electrical Workers, said that the primary concern of his union's members was the "completely inadequate" cost-of-living clause with a ceiling that had "drastically eroded" their living standards. They demand an uncapped cost-of-living provision that will protect them "penny for penny" against rising prices, he added.

The union also is asking "substantial across-the-board increases in wages and salaries," he said, "not only to catch up but to assure an improved standard of living during the term of the upcoming contract."

Average Hourly Pay $5.05
General Electric hourly workers now earn, on the average, about $5.05 an hour, union sources said. Under their present three-year contracts, they received three wage increases, totaling 47 cents an hour and cost-of-living adjustments totaling 41 cents an hour.

The expiring contracts provided for cost-of-living adjustments of 1 cent an hour for each full three tenths of 1 percent by which the Consumer Price Index increased in the applicable measurement periods. But the provision sets maximum amounts for each period, thereby limiting the increases that could result from cost-of-living rises. It is these ceilings that the unions want to eliminate, but there were indications that they might run into company resistance.

Other union demands include improved pensions for workers who retire in the future as well as for those already retired, a union shop, a reduction in the 40-hour work-week without a cut in pay, greater job security and better income protection during layoffs, broadened health insurance coverage including dental care, elimination of area wage differentials and longer vacations.

TWA's Europe.

If you've got the time, we've got the savings.

If you can plan to stay at least 22 days and not more than 45 days visiting Europe, TWA can save you money. A lot of money. If you want to leave right away, our Excursion Fare can save you from 31% to 44% off the Economy Fare. If you can plan ahead, our APEX Fare can save you as much as 49%. Additionally, by really spending time in Europe your trip becomes a European experience, not just a brief vacation.

TWA's APEX Fare
This fare has some additional conditions but you can save a lot more money. Purchase your confirmed round-trip ticket within 7 days of booking but at least 2 months before departure.

Once your APEX ticket has been issued, any changes before departure are subject to a $50 or 10% cancellation fee, whichever is higher. Should you change your plans en route where the return portion of your APEX ticket cannot be used, the entire APEX fare may be applied as a credit toward the purchase of any higher applicable fare.

Obviously, fares like these are going to be popular. And since seats on all APEX flights are limited, the sooner you book the better. So what are you waiting for? Just call your Travel Agent or TWA.

By charging these fares on your TWA Getaway* Card you can extend your payments over time.

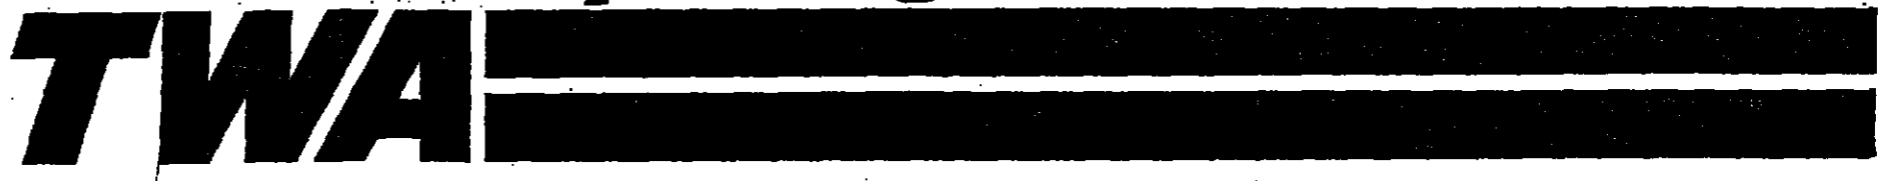

Here's how the fares work:
TWA's 22-45 Day Excursion Fares

fact was not in a coma; in fact, he said, Mr. Hughes was partly conscious and he found no evidence of a stroke.

Dr. Chaffin said that a blood-urea-nitrogen test he ordered late on April 4 showed that Mr. Hughes was suffering from a kidney ailment and this was later noted as the cause of death. But Dr. Montemayor, reading the same test results, said, "The blood test was good, the urine test was good, all the analyses taken after he entered into coma, were relatively normal."

Dr. Chaffin said that Mr. Hughes fell out of bed on March 1 in Acapulco and severed a half-inch tumor on his scalp, which left a fresh scar noted in the autopsy. Clarence A. Waldron, one of Mr. Hughes's aides, told the Mexican Federal Police that Mr. Hughes had severe vertigo when he was taken to a chair in Freeport, Bahamas.

For nearly two weeks before his death, Mr. Hughes was treated by Dr. Norman Crane of Los Angeles, one of three physicians who shared responsibility for his care. Dr. Crane did not accompany Mr. Hughes when he flew to Houston on April 5.

Chronic Kidney Ailment

Dr. Chaffin said that he did not establish that Mr. Hughes was suffering from a chronic kidney ailment until a little over 13 hours before the time of death. Subsequently an autopsy in Houston established that Mr. Hughes had died of kidney failure.

In an extensive interview with The New York Times, Dr. Crane, an 83-year-old surgeon who had treated Mr. Hughes since 1932, acknowledged that such an ailment was readily identifiable and treatable. He said the fact that Mr. Hughes was suffering kidney damage might have eluded his doctors because he refused to submit to the blood and urine tests necessary to identify the ailment.

Dr. Chaffin said he had treated Mr. Hughes "surgically related" medical problems on a consultant basis and that Mr. Hughes's day-to-day care was handled by three physicians. But Dr. Chaffin said, on the night of April 4 Mr. Hughes's medical condition was "deteriorating rapidly" as he ordered blood and urine tests without the patient's permission.

Dr. Chaffin said Mr. Hughes was only partly conscious during this period.

Dr. Chaffin says he was with Mr. Hughes continuously from Dec. 23, 1975 until his death on April 5. He described the last months of Mr. Hughes's life in an interview in Los Angeles, which was part of an inquiry by Times reporters in Houston, Salt Lake City, Las Vegas, Los Angeles, Acapulco and Miami.

Virtually Bedridden

Dr. Chaffin said that since Mr. Hughes broke his hip in London in 1972, he had been virtually bedridden and increasingly dependent upon the group of aides and medical men around him.

Most of the men closest to Mr. Hughes in his last days had been selected for the job, directly or indirectly, by Frank William Gay, the executive vice president and director of the Summa Corporation, Mr. Hughes's holding company.

Mr. Gay is a Mormon; indeed, a significant number of men in the senior echelon at Summa and around Mr. Hughes were members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (Mormons).

There were, in effect, two circles of companions to Mr. Hughes.

The inner circle, according to Summa sources, consisted of Lavar Miller and Howard Eckersley, both of Salt Lake City; George Francom, of Las Vegas; Clarence A. Waldron and John Holmes of Los Angeles.

The outer circle included Eric E. Buzdy and Clyde B. Roy of Los Angeles and Roy Crane, of Burbank. Despite repeated visits to their homes, as well as telephone calls and requests through the Summa Corporation none of them would agree to an on-the-record interview.

Rotation of Doctors

In effect the responsibility for Mr. Hughes's medical care seemed relegated to this outer circle. Dr. Chaffin said that he sought permission to examine Mr. Hughes by going through an aide. He said he did not believe that the other doctors had much better access.

Mr. Hughes was regularly treated by three physicians who rotated the responsibility of being on standby wherever Mr. Hughes chose to live. Dr. Crane, 71, a Los Angeles internist and a graduate of the Johns Hopkins Medical School, had treated Mr. Hughes for nearly a decade.

Dr. Crane had "inherited" Mr. Hughes as a patient, Dr. Chaffin said, from his medical colleague Dr. Vernon Mason, who treated the industrialist for many years and who died in the mid-1960's.

Dr. Crane was on standby duty during Mr. Hughes's last two weeks in Acapulco and his view of Mr. Hughes's medical condition, Dr. Chaffin said, would be informative. However, repeated efforts to reach Mr. Crane, though his office and through relatives in Stockton, Calif., failed.

Dr. Wilbur S. Thain, a general practitioner from Logan, Utah, was also on the Hughes medical staff. For several years he had treated Mr. Hughes while also conducting a busy family medical practice in Logan. But early in 1975, according to medical associates, he gave up his practice to devote more time to Mr. Hughes. Dr. Thain is Mr. Gay's brother-in-law.

Dr. Homer C. Clark of Salt Lake City has been associated with Mr. Hughes's care since 1970. It was Dr. Clark's laboratory in Salt Lake City that supplied blood for Mr. Hughes's transfusions in a medical crisis in the summer of 1970. Dr. Clark is the brother of Randi Clark, an executive assistant to Mr. Gay at the Summa Corporation.

Blood for Transfusions

Last Dec. 23 Dr. Chaffin was summoned to Freeport. He found Mr. Hughes much weaker than he had been in August, he said. Though called to treat Mr. Hughes, Dr. Chaffin says he was seldom asked to see his patient. From the day he arrived until Mr. Hughes died Dr. Chaffin said he had only three "official visits"—visits in which he talked to and treated Mr. Hughes.

"I saw him almost daily," the doctor adds, "by going in and watching him when he was asleep."

In early February of this year, the Hughes party moved to Acapulco, according to sources there, and sealed off the top floor of the luxurious Princess Hotel. Mr. Hughes stayed in a darkened room—its windows sealed by plywood and black curtains—where he slowly succumbed to kidney disease.

Dr. Chaffin said he and the other doctors were concerned about Mr. Hughes's weight loss in Acapulco. But at no time before April 4, Dr. Chaffin said, does he recall being convinced that Mr. Hughes had a kidney ailment or discussing it with the other doctors. Dr. Chaffin said he did not know when before April 4, Mr. Hughes might have had the test for a kidney ailment.

'Willful' Patient

He described Mr. Hughes as a "willful" and difficult patient who would not submit to medical procedures easily and who had had dramatic weight losses earlier because he would not follow a proper diet. During his Las Vegas sojourn, according to the doctor, Mr. Hughes suffered from anemia and malnutrition brought on by eating only candy bars, other sweets and drinking milk.

Now, in retrospect, Dr. Chaffin says, "You could ask, why in God's name wasn't something done for him? But with Howard Hughes you just couldn't do things." Failure to permit proper tests, he said, "was entirely his own fault because he would not allow it. He made his own decisions about everything."

On March 1, Dr. Chaffin recalled, Mr. Hughes fell from his bed and struck his head on a bed table, shearing off a half-inch tumor. The accident gave the doctor a chance to test the tissue, and he said he had found the tumor benign.

On March 5, Dr. Chaffin said, Mr. Hughes was "lucid, in control of his faculties" and inquired of Dr. Chaffin about several doctors and nurses who had treated him after an airplane crash in 1946.

Dr. Chaffin said on April 4 an aide to Mr. Hughes summoned him to the darkened room because he was "concerned" about Mr. Hughes's condition. Dr. Chaffin said he had found the patient breathing fast, only semiconscious and "deteriorating rapidly."

Dr. Chaffin said he took the initiative to order blood and urine tests. He said that Dr. Crane drew the blood for the tests. At midnight, the results came in, Dr. Chaffin said, and confirmed his suspicion that Mr. Hughes had a kidney ailment.

Dr. Chaffin said he had realized that if they hospitalized Mr. Hughes in Mexico they would need a local physician because neither he nor Dr. Crane were licensed to practice outside the United States. Dr. Chaffin said he had called in Dr. Montemayor, whose name he had received from a patient.

The Mexican doctor said he arrived at 6 A.M. on April 5 and found a nude, emaciated man with bed sores who was covered by a pasted sheet. His hair was long but not "hippie-length" and his beard was trimmed to about an inch and a half, according to the doctor.

Dr. Montemayor looked at the results of the blood and urine tests and found them both "good." He said that in his opinion the tests could not account for the coma in which he found Mr. Hughes.

Dr. Montemayor said that Mr. Hughes's doctors had told him that on the previous Friday, April 2, "he had a violent and sudden shock, which I imagine was the stroke probably through a brain hemorrhage."

Dr. Chaffin said he never told Dr. Montemayor that Mr. Hughes had had a stroke, but he said that Dr. Crane had the discussion with Dr. Montemayor out of his earshot.

Of accounts about long, curling finger nails, Dr. Montemayor said: "I saw his hands and his nails didn't attract my attention. He was well looked after and clean." Bed sores are to be expected in such cases.

Houston Is Chosen

Local hospitalization was ruled out by the three doctors because the hospitals lacked sufficiently sophisticated equipment and personnel to handle such a case. Houston was chosen as the nearest city with adequate facilities.

Summa officials said an effort was made to charter a plane in Acapulco but that none was available.

Meanwhile, Summa had leased a small four to six passenger Lear 24B jet to pick up Dr. Thain, who had been vacationing in the Bahamas, and take him to Acapulco. The plane arrived at 8:05 A.M., but it was three hours before the Hughes party could decide who would accompany the billionaire to Houston.

It was finally agreed that George Francom and Dr. Crane would take a commercial flight to Los Angeles. Three aides were left behind to clean up matters in Mexico.

The plane bearing Mr. Hughes left shortly after 11 A.M. for Houston. Dr. Chaffin said Mr. Hughes was alive when the plane took off. According to the information Dr. Thain later gave to Houston medical officials, Mr. Hughes died at 1:27 P.M., about 23 minutes before the aircraft's scheduled arrival.

Dr. Chaffin said he did not record the time, but recalled looking out of the window at the time and noting that the plane had just passed from the shoreline to Brownsville, Tex. This is a crucial point, he said, because of the "enormous red tape" and "difficulties" that would have arisen if Mr. Hughes had died in Mexico.

Legal experts also pointed out that the autopsy and medical investigation would have been conducted by the Mexican authorities.

The Houston autopsy has not been made public. At a news conference on April 6, Dr. Henry D. McIntosh, the attending physician at Methodist Hospital in Houston, said he would not comment on whether Mr. Hughes's physicians had underestimated his physical durability, adding, "I would not want to even speculate in this area because I don't know. I really don't know. A man himself has to decide if he needs some help, and beyond that I just don't know."

On April 8, the Houston City Bureau of Vital Statistics received a death certificate on Howard R. Hughes. It was signed by Dr. Jack L. Titus, who performed the autopsy and is the hospital's chief of pathology. It listed "chronic renal failure" as the immediate cause of death.

Another section of the certificate is reserved for listing "other significant contributing factors." The section was left blank if Mr. Hughes had a stroke, head or other problem, obliged to record section, according to the bureau.

In the last Howard Hughes functioned in a crecy to which conditioned t Wright, director Medical Four called Dr. McIntosh and Dr. Titus, and Dr. Titus, according to Dr. McIntosh, the attending physician at Methodist Hospital in Houston, said he would not comment on whether Mr. Hughes's physicians had underestimated his physical durability, adding, "I would not want to even speculate in this area because I don't know. ## Hartke, Refuting Charge Trip to Africa in 1974

INDIANAPOLIS, April 20 (AP)—Senator Vance Hartke said today that he visited four African countries in 1974 as chairman of the Senate Veterans Affairs Committee even though an expense account he filed in 1975 listed only a trip to the Ivory Coast.

"I can look at that and give you a report on it," the three-term Indiana Senator said when asked at a news conference to explain the discrepancy. "But I mean all the money was accounted for. Most of it was in counterpart funds gotten from one country."

Counterpart funds, or foreign currency allotted to senators and representatives visiting abroad, are provided by the State Department and are, in effect, authorization to make the trip.

"Every trip I've been on, I've worked extremely hard," Senator Hartke said in refuting charges that he had taken unnecessary trips at the taxpayers' expense. The charge was made recently by Representative Philip H. Hayes, Mr. Hartke's Democratic primary opponent.

In challenging the Senator's travels, Mr. Hayes said Senator Hartke "took a free trip around the world at the expense of Hootsie taxpayers."

The plane bearing Mr. Hughes left shortly after 11 A.M. for Houston. Dr. Chaffin said Mr. Hughes was alive when the plane took off. According to the information Dr. Thain later gave to Houston medical officials, Mr. Hughes died at 1:27 P.M., about 23 minutes before the aircraft's scheduled arrival.

The Harvey Sound Professionals pit live musicians vs. a Tandberg.

Will you be able to tell the difference?

This Thursday, April 22nd and this Friday, April 23rd, from 12 Noon-8 PM, the Harvey Sound Professionals have invited laboratory specialists from Tandberg and a live performing group to conduct one of the most exciting of all Hi-Fi experiments...

Live vs. Recorded

First, you will learn the essential techniques of making live recordings, such as microphone placement, and mixing for proper balance. You can actually take over the controls, and hear what effects changes in the controls have on your recording.

Then, you will hear why Tandberg wants you to compare the sound of the live performance with the recording. The ultimate test!

April 22nd and 23rd, 12 Noon-8 PM at 236 E. Post Rd., White Plains (914) WH 8-3380 (Opposite Alexander's)

Free Cleaning and Demagnetizing Any Make or Model Recorder

If you bring your tape deck (reel-to-reel or cassette) to Harvey Sound during this demonstration, Tandberg experts will clean and demagnetize your machine. FREE.

All Tandberg owners will have their machines completely tuned up. FREE.

Your Tape Deck vs. a Tandberg

This time using recorded music as a source, we invite you to match your tape deck in an AB comparison, against a similarly priced Tandberg.

Tandberg Tape Decks start at $499, and range in price to $2499. Choose your opponent carefully.

Labor Leader Aids Jackson But Likes Humphrey Best

By JAMES T. WOOTEN
Special to The New York Times

PHILADELPHIA, April 20—A port in the state—he has no week before the Pennsylvania staff workers assigned to Penn- Presidential primary. Senator, Henry M. Jackson of Washing- ton won today an endorsement for television appearances and from a union leader who pre- fers Senator Hubert H. Hum- phrey of Minnesota as the Democratic nominee.

Edward F. Toohy, president of the Philadelphia Council of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations, announced his support for Mr. Jackson at a news conference here this afternoon, calling him a "real friend" of organized labor. But later, Mr. Toohy con- ceded that Mr. Humphrey, who is not officially seeking the nomination, is his first choice and a favorite of most of his fellow union officials as well. His endorsement came on a day when Mr. Jackson was vigorously campaigning here in this city and Jimmy Carter, his major opponent in the primary next Tuesday, was seek- ing votes in Pittsburgh. Representative Morris K. Udall of Arizona, who bor- rowed $30,000 over the week- end to finance campaign efforts in Pennsylvania, spent the day in the Southwest with plans to return to the state to- morrow. Meanwhile, Gov. George C. Wallace, who finished second in the primary here in the 1972 election, also arrived in Pittsburgh today to begin two days of rather limited cam- paigning. financial benefits he claims the Democratic convention in July. Mr. Carter's schedule will take him to the Scranton and Wilkes-Barre areas tomorrow, where Senator Jackson will also be campaigning before he flies to Evansville, Ind., for a Jefferson-Jackson Day dinner. The Senator, in remarks here tonight at the Philadelphia Demo- cratic fund-raising banquet, took both Mr. Carter and President Ford to task for criticizing Washington. "Why, Washington hasn't been under such heavy attack since it was burned by the British in 1812," he said. "Actually, that took place in 1814, but with the primary election just a week away, Philadelphia's Democratic leaders aren't likely to notice a mistake like that from the candidate they are supporting."

Carter Emerging as Indiana Favorite

Special to The New York Times

INDIANAPOLIS, April 20—When Senator Henry M. Jackson made his first Indiana appearance of the 1976 Presidential campaign on April 11, fewer than 400 people turned out for a rally in an auditorium at the state fairgrounds that holds about 3,500. The night before, Senator Hubert H. Humphrey, the non-candidate who somehow manages to show up in each Presidential primary state just as the campaign is beginning, drew a sellout audience to a Democratic fund-raising dinner. "Jackson is trying to appeal to the same people in Indiana as Humphrey does," said Frank Corsaro, Mr. Jackson's local coordinator, "but they like Humphrey better."

In Pennsylvania, where the same situation exists, the Humphrey forces are struggling to turn out a big Jackson vote. Carter of Georgia in the state's pivotal primary on April 27. But in Indiana, which votes one week later, on May 4, the Jackson campaign seems much less forceful, despite the covert support of the state labor federation and of most of the party organization, headed by William Trisler, the Indiana Democratic chairman. Local Preference Control of local offices here while Mr. Carter must also campaign for the last states where party organizations are openly financed by 2 percent kickbacks from the salaries of public officials. So the real muscle of the organization is going into a gubernatorial primary contest between Larry Conrad, the secretary of state, and Jack New- man, the state treasurer, and not into Presidential politics. The Jackson campaign here—

Jackson Appears to Trail in State's May 4 Race for 75 Delegates

Mr. Udall went away just before the filing deadline; he was then discovered that Mr. Udall was short 35 signatures on his nominating petition in the 6th Congressional District, keeping him off the ballot. The Supreme Court refused yesterday to consider immediately Mr. Udall's challenge to a state law that requires a candidate to qualify in all districts to run in any of them. The appeal of Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama in this state, where he finished second in 1972 with 41 percent of the primary vote, has faded dramatically, by all accounts, leaving a head-on Carter-Jackson fight. Mr. Wallace has canceled several campaign dates, although he still intends to appear here. Mr. Jackson's assess appear to be his popularity in the heavily industrialized belt along Lake Michigan, where he has the support of the steel workers and of Robert Pastrick, the Lake County Democratic chairman; the faint possibility that Mr. Carter's comments here about "ethnic purity" will hurt him with black voters; and the fact that Mr. Jackson will have a week to campaign here while Mr. Carter must also campaign for the Texas, Georgia and Alabama primaries.

"I don't think Jackson can make it," commented one long-time Democratic activist, "Ethnic purity" doesn't seem to have hurt Carter much, and the natural desire for Jackson is a shoe-in, that was here three years ago, has somehow evaporated. I saw him speak to 2,500 people in 1973 and turn at least 2,000 of them off." The Republican Presidential contest seems clear-cut, with a President Ford considered likely to beat Ronald Reagan. A poll taken last week by the State Center for the University of Michigan showed 56 percent of respondents favoring Mr. Ford over Mr. Carter. This is not philosophy, like the politics of California, said the chairman of the "Indiana" party, and circumstances "cumbents." # Despite Self-Deprecating Remarks, Udall Remains Optimistic

By CHARLES MOHR
Special to The New York Times

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M., April 20—Representative Morris K. Udall told an audience this week that if he continued to run just behind the winner in each Democratic Presidential primary, he may ask Barbara Streisand to sing "Second Hand Rose from Second Avenue" as his official campaign song. The remark was characteristic of the lanky Arizona Representative and of his self-deprecating, realistic, and perhaps destructive vision of himself and the political world around him. However, Mr. Udall still has hopes and a vision of a future that he thinks holds some possibility of his winning the Democratic Presidential nomination in New York in July. Touring the Southwest and Colorado this week seeking delegates in the area's upcoming party caucuses, he has been doing more than making light of his unbroken string of second-place finishes in the primaries. To audiences in Phoenix, his hometown Tucson, and in cities scattered across New Mexico and Colorado, the Congressman has been arguing that one, including Jimmy Carter, the former Governor of Georgia, can lock up the nomi-ination before the convention in Madison Square Garden. And Mr. Udall says that, in an open convention, he still has a chance to win because of his ideological acceptability to liberal Democrats. Thus, Mr. Udall has been combining self-deprecation with a modest form of optimism. He joked in Phoenix that "I almost lost my amateur status by winning in Wisconsin." But Mr. Udall also told a group of citizens in Tucson, "We stopped Jimmy Carter at the pass at Wisconsin and New York. There is now not going to be any stampede to Carter." In an interview today Mr. Udall said that his staff had combined computation with prediction to conclude that "there is no way Jimmy Carter can go over 900 delegates" by the end of the primary elections on June 8. It will take 1,505 delegate votes to take the nomination. "Carter's bandwagon has really slowed," Mr. Udall argued, citing developments in nonprimary caucus states such as Iowa, where the precinct caucuses that Mr. Carter won on January 19 have been followed by a series of county and Congressional district conventions that will be followed by a state convention on May 29. Mr. Udall asserted that the present outlook in Iowa is that Mr. Carter can be sure of only 17 of that state's 47 delegates. Mr. Udall said 10 are sure for him and 20 are still uncommitted. The uncommitted haven't packed in Iowa," Mr. Udall said, "and they aren't going to panic elsewhere." He argued that caucus results in Virginia, South Carolina and Oklahoma had been disappointing to Mr. Carter and his supporters because no overwhelming move to the former Governor had taken place. However, Mr. Udall has been telling audiences that Mr. Carter is ahead in Pennsylvania and is likely to win the "beauty contest" there—so called because it is unrelated to the contest for the state's delegates. Mr. Udall has been arguing that attention should be focused primarily on the delegate contest, which is based on races in Pennsylvania's 50 state senatorial districts. Mr. Udall said that his own polls and those of other politicians indicate that while Mr. Carter is ahead in the popular vote, he is behind in Pennsylvania, his home state. "The support could be eroded, as happened in Wisconsin earlier this month," Mr. Udall said today. "Carter's lead is narrow."

cently that the failure to reconstitute the Federal Election Commission is "crippling" the Udall campaign through the withholding of about $225,000 in Federal matching funds, asserted in a news conference in Denver that Mr. Carter was using his higher public recognition as a weapon to hurt the Udall campaign in Pennsylvania. He charged that Mr. Carter had "decided to duck all efforts to arrange joint appearances" with Mr. Udall and with Senator Henry M. Jackson of Washington to discuss election issues. "So far this week he has ducked a debate on Thursday in Philadelphia arranged by Governor Shapp; he is ducking joint appearances arranged by the Young Democrats on Friday in Scranton; and I have just learned in the past few hours he will duck a joint interview on ABC's 'Issues and Answers' program on Sunday." Mr. Udall does not seem personally optimistic about his chances in the Pennsylvania primary, although he is now predicting a second-place finish. One factor which Mr. Udall finds encouraging is his belief that Senator Jackson is a weak national candidate, despite Mr. Jackson's victories in Massachusetts and New York. As guarded and qualified as

Mr. Udall's optimism may be, many observers would argue that he has almost no cause for optimism at all. "Actually, that took place in 1914, but with the primary election just a week away, Philadelphia's Democratic leaders aren't likely to notice a mistake like that from the candidate they are supporting."

1974 DIVORCES WERE AT NEARLY 2% RATE

WASHINGTON, April 20 (UPI)—Nearly 2 percent of American married women were divorced in 1974, a record for United States divorce rates since World War II, a Federal Government study reported today. The National Center for Health Statistics also said couples divorcing in 1974 had about 1,099,000 children under the age of 18—a third straight year of decline in the rates. Although the number of men involved presumably would be the same, the center, a unit of the Health, Education and Welfare Department, keeps and reports its divorce rate statistics in terms of the female partner. It said the 1974 rate was 19.3 per 1,000 married women aged 15 or older. The previous postwar peak was 17.9 per 1,000 in 1946, a year of social upheaval in which the strains of wartime separation took a heavy toll on American marriages. In 1967, the year before divorces began escalating rapidly, the center said the rate was 11.2 per 1,000 married women.

Democrats Found More Conservative Than in 1972

maries—for radical social change. The conservative mood in the six early primary states surveyed seems all the more significant because there are indications that Democrats nationally are even more conservative. When compared with a national cross section of Democrats polled by The New York Times and CBS News last month after the Illinois primary, the primary voters have more liberal views on a wide range of political issues than do other Democrats in all states except Florida. The chief beneficiary of the voters' interest in new faces and domestic issues, the study finds, is Jimmy Carter. The hard-driving former Georgia Governor has managed to elbow his way to the front of the Democratic pack with a constituency unlike that amassed in recent years by any other serious contender for the Democratic nomination. Apart from the blacks among them, the Carter voters are generally affluent, suburban and rural, and seem, in many respects, like Republicans in disguise. In state after state, they were more likely than other Democratic voters to have voted for Richard M. Nixon in 1972 and more likely to desert the party this year to vote for President Ford if their candidate is denied the nomination. Starting in the first primary in snowy New Hampshire and continuing in five other primaries—Massachusetts, Florida, Illinois, Wisconsin and New York—The New York Times and CBS News questioned nearly 8,000 voters, in accordance with strict sampling procedures, in an effort to determine what motivated their votes. Ten persons questioned listed what issues seemed to benefit this as a major concern. Mr. Udall said he was particularly well among those concerned about pollution and environmental issues, but very few of those questioned are.

sweeping generalities from the attitudes of these early primary voters. The candidates were little known at first, and the field was very large. Further, different combinations of rivals vied in different states, leaving many voters without the opportunity to pick their first choice. Tentative Themes It is, moreover, difficult to say exactly how the complexion of the race would have been altered if Senator Hubert H. Humphrey had been an active candidate. Thus far, the party's traditional majority—the working people and liberals who coalesced behind Presidents like Roosevelt and Kennedy—have found no congenial outlet. Still, a few tentative themes emerge. Probably most striking is the waning of foreign policy issues. Four years ago, Senator George McGovern rode to the nomination on a crest of indignation over the war. This year no such compelling issue has emerged, except possibly in New York where Jewish concern over Israel and resentment against the Soviet Union helped to give Senator Henry M. Jackson a victory. Race Relations Issue The Times/CBS News surveys have found that Senator Jackson has done extremely well among those who said that they were concerned about relations with the Soviet Union. Unfortunately for the Washington Senator's aspirations, however, scarcely one in fifteen Democratic voters in the six states expressed any special worry over this issue. Similarly, the only remaining source of concern grew perceptibly, much to the advantage of Mr. Carter, who has made a major issue of what he calls the "battered" Federal bureaucracy. Personalities a Factor Moreover, he generally did well among fiscally conservative voters—those who felt that budget even at the cost of cutting social services, Mr. at Harvard University.

A traditionally abrasive and divisive Democratic issue—race relations—appears to be playing little direct role this year. The chief magnet for those hostile to black aspirations, Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama, has done poorly and has all but dropped out of the race. About 40 percent of the Democrats interviewed felt, on average, that the Government pays too much attention to the needs of minorities. But these voters have not particularly favored any one of the remaining contenders—Mr. Carter, Mr. Udall or Mr. Jackson. What then has filled this issue vacuum? Basically, it appears that economic issues and questions about the size and functions of the central government have played the biggest role so far. Across all six states, voters selected "job guarantees" as the issue that influenced their vote about as often as any other issue. But all major Democratic contenders feel that the Federal Government should do more to cut unemployment, and this issue has not been a "cutting" one. That is, those who agreed that the Government should guarantee a job to everyone who wants to work have divided their votes about evenly among the three leaders. What is perhaps more cutting, and it has worked mostly to the benefit of Mr. Carter, is a feeling that government is too big, that it spends too much and administers programs inefficiently. As the primary season progressed, the number mentioning "size of government" as a source of concern grew perceptibly, much to the advantage of Mr. Carter, who has made a major issue of what he calls the "battered" Federal bureaucracy.

Udall drew well among those on the liberal side of this issue, while Mr. Jackson did not seem to be hurt or helped by it. Of course, issues are not the only factors influencing voting choices. The personality of the candidates, and whether voters perceive them as good leaders and honest men, also play a role. And some voters may want to vote for the man who has the best chance of beating the Republican candidate in November. Senator Jackson generally did fairly well among voters citing leadership and competence as important factors. Mr. Udall, among those citing consistency and honesty. But it was Mr. Carter who scored best among voters who seem to be playing an increasingly potent role as the campaign progresses—those who feel it important to elect someone who is not part of the Washington establishment and who want someone who has a good chance to win in November. Mr. Jackson and Mr. Udall, who have been in Congress for many years, did not do well among these voters. Mr. Carter, who frequently calls himself an "outsider," did very well. He also scored well among voters wanting a winner. Both Mr. Udall and Mr. Jackson generally did poorly among these. In sum, then, the polls suggest that the race has been dominated by moderately conservative Democrats. No candidate purveying the programmatic liberalism of the New Deal type has emerged as the favorite of the working man and the social liberals. If such a candidate does emerge—many have mentioned Senator Humphrey—the surveys suggest that there is a good chance many Carter backers will look elsewhere in November. The Times and CBS News will continue to trace the path of the campaign in future primaries, including the key Pennsylvania race next week. As coverage is Prof. Gary R. Orren of the government department at Harvard University.

President Considers Of Campaign Fund

By WARREN WEAVER Jr.
Special to The New York Times

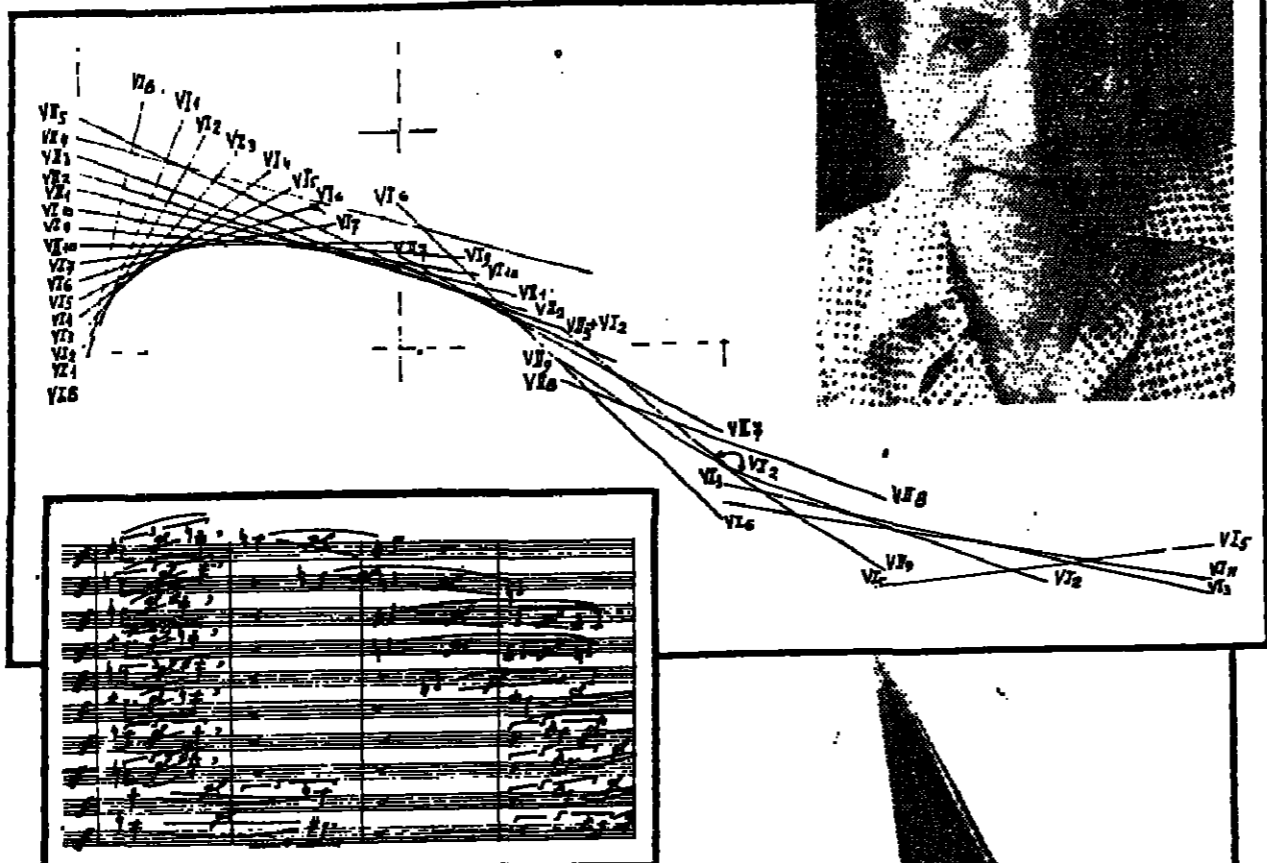

WASHINGTON, April 20—President Ford is seriously considering vetoing the campaign bill now awaiting final approval in Congress, on the grounds that it deprives the Federal Election Commission of vital political independence. Arguing against disapproval are two major factors that have more to do with the 1976 Presidential campaign than with the contents of the legislation. A veto could make the President appear to be a calculating obstructionist, continuing indefinitely the freeze on primary subsidies to Presidential candidates while his own campaign remains prosperous because of private contributions. Also, a veto could arouse Congress as to provide enough votes to override, scoring a point for the Democratic leadership there and casting Congress rather than the White House in the role of political reformer. In an interview with a group of Texas editors made public today, the President, in discussing the campaign bill, said, "I am not going to sign legislation for any reason." He criticized Congress for not getting the bill to his desk before the current Easter recess. Ford Awaits Bill Mr. Ford said flatly that he would not reach a final decision on signing or vetoing the bill until he had received "the proper document," late this month or in early May. Some interested parties have urged him to announce his approval now, so that candidates may borrow more readily against subsidies due them. Simply reconstituting the Election Commission to restore its subsidy powers "would have been the right thing to do," the President declared, adding, "Unfortunately, the Congress apparently has significantly changed some of the very important provisions in that legislation, so that it is what we are analyzing at the present time." The Election Commission reported today that the backlog of unpaid subsidy claims rose by more than $1 million this week, to a total of nearly $2.4 million. The lion's share of that money, more than $900,000, will go to President Ford when and if the campaign bill becomes law. New claims filed yesterday were the first since Ronald Reagan, the President's Republican challenger, made a national telecast that his aides said raised $700,000 in private contributions. But the Reagan campaign filed for only about $154,000 in matching funds, for a total backlog since March 23 of $436,000. Opponent of the Measure Among organizations urging the President to veto the campaign bill are the United States Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers, despite a conviction among Congressional Republicans that the final draft is more generous to corporate political committees than could have been expected. Alexander Bickart, director of the political arm of the American Federation of Labor, said the bill is "reportedly angry" of the Governor is

In These Equations Lurks Lush Music

From "Formalized Music: Tension and Mathematics in Concertation," by Iannis Xenakis, © 1971 by Indiana University Press. Reprinted by permission of the publisher.

Starting with a mathematical concept, Iannis Xenakis plotted a graph, top, that was translated into his first musical composition, "Metastasis," above, and also plans for the Philips Pavilion at the 1958 Brussels World's Fair.

By JOHN ROCKWELL

In a world increasingly dominated by science, Iannis Xenakis might well be considered the most technocratic of all musicians. The Greco-French composer, three of whose works will be featured on a Brooklyn Philharmonia program tonight at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, does enlist a fearsome array of mathematical formulas and computer programming in his compositions after all. His books are largely unreadable by even the most willing musician, unless that musician is also a trained mathematician or logician.

None of which quite prepares one for the sound of the music, which—at least to an open-eared listener—can be as cosmically Proustian as Wagner. And Mr. Xenakis's own prose is shot through with a heaven-storming exuberance reminiscent of both Wagner and one of his own principal teachers, Olivier Messiaen. The purpose of music, he has written, is "to draw toward a total exaltation in which the individual mingles, losing his consciousness in a truth immediate, rare, enormous and perfect."

But Mr. Xenakis (pronounced zeh NAHkiss) is no swooning hippie, either: complexity is just as much a hallmark of his aesthetic as it is of his music. He has denounced both "technocrats" and "intuitionists." And if that would seem to make him some sort of universalist, striving for a transcendent synthesis of all aspects of humanity—"Man is one, indivisible and total," he writes; "he thinks with his belly and feels with his mind"—and he turns out to be suspicious of that stance, too.

"I am very agnostic," he said yesterday in his room at the Regency Hotel. "I don't know if there is any objective world. After the debacle of 19th-century science, we have learned that science is not absolute. We work now as if something is so, realizing that our assumptions may be defeated in a few generations or even sooner. It's so fragile, the axioms of mathematics, of logic. "I don't know if I am saying the truth in my music or my books. But I do think this way of research is more necessary than any other kind. I like to see things related in different universes—the scientific, the artistic and other."

ers we don't know about yet but that we may be living in already. I don't say I love or admire my music, though—on the contrary, I am distant from it."

Mr. Xenakis was born in 1922 of Greek parents in Rumania and trained in both music and engineering in Athens. After fighting in the anti-Nazi Greek resistance during the war—which resulted in a permanent facial scar and an escape from a death sentence—he came to Paris in 1947. Until 1960 he studied and worked as both musician and architect, during which time he designed the Philips Pavilion at the 1958 World's Fair in Brussels and collaborated with Le Corbusier on several major projects.

His career as a musician began with "Metastasis" (1953-54), and ever since he has worked explicitly with the translation of mathematical and logistical formulas into sound. Or, as he puts it, "Music, by its very abstract nature, is the first of the arts to have attempted the conciliation of artistic creation with scientific thought."

The Music Counts It would take a trained mathematician to pass judgment on Mr. Xenakis's mathematics, but as with any formal system used by any composer, that isn't quite the point. What counts is Mr. Xenakis's music itself—and if he is correct about the underlying communality of phenomenon, chances are that the success of his music rests on the elegance and coherence of his mathematical formulations. "Musicians are like all men, which is to say like all apes—they are imitative," Mr. Xenakis said yesterday. "My struggle was not to be imitative." As a result he has not only ignored the principal trends of mid-century musical avant-gardism—serialism, chance music, new tonality—but also campaigned ardently against them.

One result of that has been that his works have only gradually caught on, especially in this country. Actually, he is by now one of the most-performed of all contemporary composers in Europe, with festivals of his music cropping up in all the major Western countries. (There will be a series of Xenakis concerts and master classes in Buffalo under Morton Feldman's auspices between June 1 and 4.)

But although he taught at Indiana University in Bloomington between 1967 and 1972, Mr. Xenakis has not performed here as often as one might expect. Part of that is simple resistance to the new. "I don't think there are many working as I do," he says. "I don't see them around me. The superficial aspect of my music has been taken by others, especially the Polish. But art is twofold—it has an immediate appeal and then there is the thought behind it."

"Two Problems" "In America there are two problems. In the universities away from the big cities it is difficult to support a real musical life. And the people are trained 10 or 20 years ago in the serial style, which for them is avant-garde. That makes for a kind of defiance about different kinds of music. Besides that, my music is difficult to perform."

It is this difficulty that has limited Xenakis's performances in this country primarily to the chamber and solo works, leaving the gigantic orchestral pieces—in which the composer's extraordinary "clouds" of sound can be heard at their most dramatic—to be heard largely on records. Although tonight's concert is sponsored by the Brooklyn Philharmonia, it will offer only small-scale works: a recent piece for chamber orchestra, "Eridanos," was dropped for lack of adequate rehearsal time.

For all its complexities, audiences seem to respond to Mr. Xenakis's works "There can be a kind of intuitive understanding, as with all music," Mr. Xenakis says. "You can enjoy Bach without understanding all the technical aspects; people try to get into it even if they don't have the tools. You don't have to be a scientist of genetics in order to make love."

GOING OUT Guide

OPERA ANGLES Which kind of opera spread do you prefer—a scholarly display tracing the sources and transformations of 20 operatic works, or an array of Metropolitan Opera memorabilia, with a bonus of fun and games (a giveaway sweepstakes)? Two such exhibitions open to the public today.

Starting this morning, four branches of the Union Dime Savings Bank will be the host in turn to an assembly of photographs and material arranged by the Metropolitan Opera for the bank, which has financed construction of the nostalgic display and later will donate it to the Met.

Among the items are a horn and ring used by Lauritz Melchior in Wagner's "Ring"; Enrico Caruso's cap from "Pagliacci"; a fan used by Gertrude Farrar in "Manon"; and color pictures of Metropolitan productions, stars and backstage activities.

Each bank show, for a month, will also include an opera sweepstakes, the top prize being tickets to five Met performances for two persons. There is a weekly prize of two tickets, with a copy of the book "Chagal at the Met" as runner-up.

The Met mini-showcase opens today at the Union Dime Savings branch on the Avenue of the Americas at 40th Street, on May 24 at Madison Avenue and 39th Street; on June 28 at Park Avenue and 50th Street, and on Sept. 1 at 1900 Northern Boulevard in Manhasset, L.I.

EVOLUTION Emphasis is on literary origins of operas at the Grotter Club, 47 East 60th Street, a bibliophile's club with a quiet, dignified atmosphere and some of the most immaculately planned displays of books and manuscripts in town. Representing more than 20 operas—not necessarily the greatest favorites—are autographed literary and musical manuscripts, first editions of literary texts, printed music, original stage designs, and photographs of writers, composers and singers.

Among the highlights are a first edition of Georg Buchner's "Woyzeck," with part of Alban Berg's autographed score of the operatic "Woyzeck"; the autographed manuscript of Maurice Maeterlinck's "Pelléas et Mélisande," with Debussy's corrected proofs of his operatic score; a page of Goethe's manuscript of "Faust," with Gounod's score for the opera, and Oscar Wilde's manuscript of "Salome." On display with Douglas Moore's manuscript draft of a scene for "The Ballad of Baby Doe" will also be a novel operatic source—the 1935 obituary of Baby Doe Tabor that appeared in The New York Times.

The Grotter exhibition is on view through June 12, Mondays through Fridays from 10 A.M. to 5 P.M., and Saturdays from 10 A.M. to 3 P.M.

DOUBLE-HEADER Town Hall, 123 West 43d Street, has two programs of interest on the agenda today in the Times Square area. At 5:45 P.M., the regular "Interlude" session will feature James Cunningham and the Acme Dance Company in the premiere of "Aesop's Fables," a six-part work choreographed by Mr. Cunningham and Lauren Persichetti and geared for "children, dance enthusiasts and music lovers." Tickets are $2.50; the lobby bar opens at 5 P.M.

Tonight at 8, the hall's "Sing Out, America" series will present Donald Gramm, the Metropolitan Opera bass-baritone, in songs by Virgil Thomson, John Duke, Paul Bowles, Ned Rorem, Richard Cumming and Charles Ives, and some traditional American numbers. Tickets are $2.50 to $6.50.

POTPOURRI W.S. Merwin, the Pulitzer Prize winner for poetry in 1972, will read from his works at 8 P.M. in the auditorium of the New School, 66 West 12th Street. Admission is $2.

Blossom Dearie and Oscar Brown Jr. are tonight's featured singers in the "Highlights in Jazz" concert at 8 o'clock at New York University's Loeb Student Center, 596 LaGuardia Place at Washington Square South. Tickets are $3.50 to $5.

"Canterbury Tales" is tonight's screening at 7 and 9 o'clock in the Pier Paolo Pasolini festival at Columbia University's International Affairs Auditorium, 420 West 118th Street. Admission is $2.50, and $1.25 for students.

Well-Crafted Play Has Fine Acting, Staging

THE HEIRESS, by Ruth and Augustus Goetz, based on Henry James's novel "Washington Square," directed by Clive Barnes, is being performed at the Broadway Theatre, West 43rd Street, through May 9.

Richard Kiley and Jane Alexander performing in drama

By CLIVE BARNES

Critics need to be consistent but never consistent enough to be tediously predictable. Last week this column offered the mildly dogmatic opinion that one could not really make plays out of novels. This week it cheerfully asserts with a certain stirring skepticism that I should have remembered "The Heiress," the adaptation by Ruth and Augustus Goetz of Henry James's novel "Washington Square." This plays absolutely splendidly.

My folly is compounded by the fact that I had already seen the play once this season—in a fine staging by Michael Kahn in Princeton, N. J. Last night, in a totally different production, it opened at the Broadhurst Theatre, and re-established its claims as an engrossing, literate piece of theater.

The story of a rich, little ugly duckling who grows up to remain just that, a rich, little ugly duckling, is sensitive and touching. The household of the widower Dr. Sloper in the Washington Square of 1850 is an oppressive environment for the shy and delicate Catherine, his solitary child. Her mother, seemingly a brilliant woman, died in childbirth, and the plain Catherine has always been a source of pain to her father. Now she has a suitor, Morris Townsend, who is handsome, worldly and charming. He is also penniless. Is he a fortune hunter?

Nygaard Conducts 'Early' Mozart

By RAYMOND ERICSON

Prodigy that he was, Mozart began composing at the age of 5, and he turned out a considerable body of music in the following years, which is largely dismissed by biographers as relatively unimportant and which is ignored by performers. Jens Nygaard rectified this in the concert he presented at Alice Tully Hall on Monday night, offering seven works written by Mozart between the ages of 5 and 13.

The major piece was "Apollo et Hyacinthus," a school opera with a Latin text by a professor at the University of Salzburg. It was composed and performed first in 1767, when Mozart was 11. As such, it is a remarkable score. If one had not been aware of the composer's youth, the work would have seemed the product of a mature musician. The craftsmanship is impeccable, the style and taste are of a very high order, but the invention is only of intermittent interest—which is where the opera suffers in comparison with Mozart's later works in this field.

There is one inspired number, a duet for soprano and tenor, slow and quietly poignant, which the composer might have written at the height of his powers. In fact, he thought well enough of it to use the music later in one of his early symphonies.

Manhattan String Quartet Shows Flair

The Manhattan String Quartet is a young group that plays with ensemble sense and makes up programs with flair. Anchored at one end by the forceful if wiry first violin of Eric Lewis and at the other by the mellow tone and superior musicianship of Judith Gyde on the cello, they presented, at Town Hall on Monday night, a program of an early Haydn quartet (Op. 20, No. 4), Respighi's "Il Tramonto" for quartet and mezzo-soprano, and Beethoven's F major quartet (Op. 135).

Also the authors have naturally enough somewhat simplified the narrative, making it slightly more coarse-grained than the coolly sophisticated original. But it undeniably works. It worked in 1948 when it was new, it worked earlier this season (with Maria Tucci and Jack Gwillim) at Princeton, and now it works again on Broadway.

The reasons are easy to see—strong characterizations, an easy, flowing story line and an oddly satisfying ironic ending. The play leaves nothing to chance. It is as well-crafted as a Chipendale chair or a Balanchine ballet.

George Keathley, who once ran the enterprising but now sadly defunct Ivanhoe Theater in Chicago, has directed the play with low-keyed subtlety. He has seized upon the play's two atmospheric elements of gentility and claustrophobia and allowed them to set the production's style. Oliver Smith's setting is austere elegant and formally correct—but just a little chilly. Compare it—should you be interested in stage design and its effect on a play's tone—with Mr. Smith's other current drawing-room interior for "The Royal Family," for the difference is crucial. Also Ann Roth's costumes—stiff, and except for Catherine's Paris gown, bordering on the provincial—are sweetly accurate.

Amadeus Performs Noble Beethoven

The Amadeus Quartet is currently engaged in a six-concert traversal of Beethoven's string quartets at Hunter College. One might hope that the remaining dates of the cycle, tomorrow and May 3 and 4, would draw more of a crowd than that which appeared on Monday, for this is quartet-playing of a distinguished sort indeed.

Amadeus Performs Noble Beethoven

The adjective "distinguished" suggests a certain sobriety, however, and those in search of fire-breathing impetuosity in their Beethoven may be a little disappointed by the Amadeus's approach. This is a group—Robert Brainin and Siegmund Nissel, the violinists, and Peter Schidlof, the violist, are transplanted Austrians; Martin Lovett, the cellist, is a native-born Briton—that has been together for some 30 years, located in London. Their playing betrays the allegiance to classicism and sweet-toned good sense that might be expected given that longevity and base of operations.

Amadeus Performs Noble Beethoven

On Monday, Mr. Brainin's playing wasn't always quite as serenely secure as one might have liked, which trou-

Jane Alexander's Catherine, with her pursed lips, her bewildered eyes searching for middle-distance happiness, and a dowdiness she wears the way other women wear chic, as a statement rather than an apology, is superb. She goes through the play, slightly submissive, hoping for better things, and, until the embittered end, defensively pliable.

She is matched by Richard Kiley's Sloper. The authority of Mr. Kiley is never less than remarkable, and here he has a role where his quality of almost arrogant diffidence, a wary tiredness, heavy-lidded and remote, works very well for him. He did not have the neurotic sensibility that Ralph Richardson once brought to the role, but somehow he was even more convincingly disillusioned and disappointed.

Of the others, the eager-eyed avariciousness of David Selby as Morris was affectively effective—here was phony with just the correct overlays of sincerity—and Jan Miner made a nice thing out of Lavinia Penniman, the tough-minded and well-meaning aunt-chaperone who sees Catherine's plight with a certain loving realism.

Amadeus Performs Noble Beethoven

But a quick movement like the Presto of the opening Quartet in D (Op. 18, No. 3) of the second "Rasumovsky" Quartet in E minor (Op. 59, No. 2), which Beethoven asks to be played "con molto di sentimento," they balanced emotion and classical form in a wonderfully moving manner—not sentimental, but full of chastely contained sentiment. The whole evening was like that—Beethoven for those who expect his music never to forsake nobility despite all its technical interest and torment.

Kitchen Adventurer: It All Began In the Fine Arts

By CRAIG CLAIBORNE

Nan Mabon, whose adventures in cooking have taken her from London to Paris to New York, came by her professional involvement in food in a notably unexpected manner. It began, she recounted recently, about 10 years ago with a midday meal in London.

"I was born in Atlanta and had a traditional Southern background in food," she said. "Cheese grits, crab dishes, hot tamales, country sausage, oyster loaf—the usual. Serious cooking had never entered my brain."

"After graduation from a proper women's Catholic college in Boston I traveled to London to study art history. More art history. I got a job at the Victoria and Albert Museum, attending lectures in Medieval art and was bored to death."

"One weekend my roommate's mother came to town and said she'd heard of a fine little restaurant, which turned out to be Rosemary Hume's Cordon Bleu cooking school. After lunch we went upstairs to watch the students, and both my roommate and I enrolled in the classes. Fantastic. I spent a year there, absolutely in love with the training and when I finished, through some good fortune, was taken in as a sort of exchange student by a French couple with a main house in Vichy, a seaside resort home near La Rochelle and another home north of Monte Carlo. It was a family of four and none of them spoke English. After four months or so I spoke French fluently.

"We Dined Well" My duties were slight. I washed vegetables, made salads, baked breads and made various kinds of fruit preserves. But we dined well with local sausages and cheeses, and every day a man would stop by with a truck filled with assorted loaves, brioches and croissants. Madame was an excellent cook, mostly simple dishes. You know, gigot on Sunday. They insisted I taste everything.

On her return to the United States the young woman got a job with the Metropolitan Museum, and this time her museum role had altered considerably. She was no longer involved in art history but rather with planning of parties and special exhibitions.

"It was in 1970, the museum's centennial was under way and there was a party every night," she recalled. When her husband, Robert Mabon, a lawyer and city planner, moved to Washington, she continued, "I went along." They lived in a small apartment in Georgetown and entertained a good deal.

"So many friends asked me in those days for recipes and advice on cooking I decided to make a business of it," she said. "I opened a cooking school," which she chose to call the New School of French Cooking.

The Mabons have recently moved to a commodious, simply furnished and stylish apartment on Manhattan's West Side, and the present kitchen could serve as a model of how to convert the kitchen of an old building into an impressively handsome, modern and functional room without destroying all evidence and feeling of substantial age.

"But you don't know the labor that went into this project," she said one recent morning. "The former occupant was a recluse in her declining years who is said to have never left the premises for five years. She never let anybody in the door and everything here was littered and broken down."

Today, the room is as bright and neat as shiny new copper with immaculate, newly installed chopping block counters and an old-fashioned, well-powered six-burner gas range with two sizable ovens. The kitchen opens into the dining room as well as into a bright, comfortable office that also neatly blends youth and age in its furnishings, including an angular table and a vintage wash basin installed a few decades ago. That kitchen is used mostly on evenings and weekends. Mornings she prepares lunch in downtown Manhattan for Gill & Duffus Inc., a small English concern that deals in coffee, cocoa and sugar in the commodities markets.

We had heard from mutual friends of Mrs. Mabon's prowess in the kitchen (her "melt-in-the-mouth" biscuits out of her childhood are famous) and we asked her to accommodate us with an assortment of dishes, both those of her Southern background and those in which she now instructs.

The cost of a series of five weekly lessons is $120. Students—attendance is limited to six per class—dine at the end of each class and appropriate wines are served. Information about her classes may be obtained by telephoning 724-8807.

With the exception of the rolled stuffed chicken and a splendid berry ice made with a food processor, the recipes offered here do not represent the French cookery taught in her classes.

Spinach and Veal-Stuffed Chicken Roll

- 2 whole chicken breasts (see notes)
- Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
- 1/2 pound fresh spinach
- 4 tablespoons butter
- 1/2 cup finely chopped onion
- 1/2 pound twice-ground lean veal
- 1/2 cup cooked rice
- 1/2 teaspoon crushed dried thyme
- 1 teaspoon crushed dried oregano
- 1 egg, lightly beaten
- Parsley sprigs for garnish
- Brown sauce (see recipe).

1. The chicken breasts for this recipe must be boned.

The skin should be left intact and they should not be split in half before or after boning. Saw them together to prepare them for stuffing. Place the breasts skin-side down between two sheets of wax paper. Pound the chicken lightly with a flat mallet and remove the top layer of wax paper. Sprinkle the chicken with salt and pepper.

2. Meanwhile, preheat the oven to 350 degrees.

3. Rinse the spinach well and trim off and discard any tough stems. Add the spinach to a saucepan and cover closely. Cook in the water that clings to the leaves. Cook briefly until wilted. Drain well and squeeze to extract excess moisture. Chop the spinach until fine.

4. Heat half the butter in a skillet and cook the onion until it is translucent. Add the meat and cook, stirring to break up the lumps. When the meat loses its pink color, spoon the mixture into a mixing bowl. Add the spinach, rice, thyme, oregano, egg and salt and pepper to taste. Blend well.

5. Spoon the mixture down the center of the chicken breasts. Fold over the two ends to enclose the stuffing and roll in der. Tie with string up the seams in. Smear the remaining butter over the rolls. Bake 45 minutes or until the meat is done. Increase the heat to 400 degrees and bake longer until nicely browned.

- 1 teaspoon tomato paste
- 1 clove garlic, peeled and crushed

- 1 bay leaf
- 1/2 teaspoon dried basil
- 1/2 teaspoon dried thyme
- 3 sprigs fresh parsley
- 2 tablespoons chopped celery leaves
- 5 cups brown veal broth or fresh or canned beef broth
- 1 cup dry white wine

1. Prepare the celery, carrot, onion and mushrooms and set aside.

2. Heat the oil in a heavy saucepan and add the vegetables. Cook, stirring often, until golden brown. Add the flour and continue cooking and stirring until lightly brown without burning, about 10 minutes.

FASHION TALK

Was a Good Day for the Japanese

By BERNADINE MORRIS

original, in his way, Yuki is in hers, out rina. Or Zandra London. His name was trained as a designer in his native Chicago for and he was in his before he started about designing Issey Miyake stepped down off the stage at the end of his fashion show at the Fashion Institute of Technology yesterday and embraced Diana Vreeland, the doyenne of American fashion was wreathed in smiles, as was her escort, Oscar de la Renta.

F.I.T. was the place to be at 3 P.M. Ottavio and Rosita Missoni were there with Marvin S. Traub, the president of Bloomingdale's. Doris Smith, whose brother, Willi, is the designer, was on the runway. Stephen Burrows was greeting his friends at the door and Elsa Peretti was peering in through her horn-rimmed glasses, and under her big-brimmed men's fedora.

All the designers were commending their Japanese colleague. It was a good day for Japanese designers in New York.

"Inventive, but they were not costumes," observed Rosita Missoni as her husband grabbed for one of the posters showing Miyake's jungle scene. "So many ideas," murmured Mr. de la Renta.

Mr. Miyake, who had presented his clothes in Paris two weeks ago (he works in Tokyo) decided to bring his show to New York "to show to friends."

It seems he hadn't had a show here for three or four years and missed the creative climate, which he finds invigorating. Once he worked for Geoffrey Beene on Seventh Avenue, and his life's ambition is to be a New York designer.

With skirts that knotted into waistbands, obis that confined flowing dresses and drawings that changed the shape of coveralls, he put on a good show. If he wants to, he'll probably end up on Seventh Avenue.

'Louise Lasser, Louise Lasser': A Slight Problem of Identity?

By JUDY KLEMESRUD

Louise Lasser, who plays the country's most talked-about housewife on television's "Mary Hartman, Mary Hartman," held a news conference here yesterday that had all the melodrama of, yes, a television soap opera.

She sipped from a glass of grapefruit juice to help soothe a sore throat. She tugged on her blood bangs. She nervously rubbed her forehead. She looked uneasy, vulnerable and harassed.

In other words, she could have been back in the Hartman kitchen in Fernwood, Ohio, where her character, Mary, is married to Tom, an occasionally impatient assembly line worker, has a 12-year-old daughter who witnessed a mass murder, and a grandfather who is an exhibitionist known as the "Fernwood flasher."

A Little Overacting?

But then, since "Mary Hartman, Mary Hartman" is a spoof of television soap operas, Miss Lasser might just have been doing a little overacting yesterday, too.

Are you Mary Hartman? she was asked in the St. Regis Hotel. "I'm having a problem with it," she replied with a half-smile. "When you're doing something daily, there is a fusion between the reality of what you are and the reality of the character. But I happen to love Mary, which is a help. But I feel her pain, too."

Miss Lasser, who is in her early 30's, said she viewed Mary Hartman as "a survivor in a world that might not be worth surviving in." And the character has not fouled up her personal life, she added, "because there is no personal life, so that's not a problem." (Miss Lasser is divorced from Woody Allen, the comedian.)

All of a sudden a bewildered Mary Hartman look passed across the actress's face. "Please be quiet," she said, rather dramatically, to the noisy group of about 50 reporters and photographers. "Please be quiet. Can we cut off the pictures now?"

90 Episodes Completed

A native New Yorker, Miss Lasser said she was in town for a week's relaxation before returning to the grueling daily production schedule in Los Angeles. She said that 90 episodes of "Mary Hartman, Mary Hartman" had been completed out of a total of 130 that have been committed to independent television stations across the country. "and after the summer, it's up in the air as to whether we continue." The series, produced by Norman Lear, is seen in New York at 11 P.M. daily on Channel 5.

How does she explain the series' tremendous nationwide popularity? "People identify with a person standing in the kitchen all day with nothing to do," she replied. "And it's not just women. I think the show appeals to men, too, because it basically appeals to the emo-

The New York Times/Robert Walker

Intellectualizing about "Mary Hartman, Mary Hartman" has become commonplace across the country, and one television critic called the series' dialogue "the American interior monologue." And even though she indulges in it herself at times, Miss Lasser said that the intellectualizing generally caused her to "giggle a lot."

"That's the kind of world I came from," she said, probably referring to her upper-middle-class New York City background and her education in political theory at Brandeis University. "But I think the people on the show like it [the intellectualizing], even though we're not a message show. We're not trying to tell you anything, or teach you anything."

The room grew noisy again, and Miss Lasser looked pained. "Please be quiet," she said, struggling with the microphone in front of her. "Please be quiet."

'Personal Feedback'

Miss Lasser, who was wearing a very un-Mary Hartmanish diaphanous beige blouse over snug-fitting light blue jeans, said that although she never read the fan letters that are written to her, she did get good "personal feedback" from viewers.

"I've never been treated with such affection," she said. "People will come up and say, 'Mary, can we do something for you, can we help you?' It's huge affection. It's as though they know the inside needs of the person."

Although the series has dealt with such formerly taboo topics as exhibitionism, masturbation, menstruation and anti-Semitism, there was only one episode, Miss Lasser said, that did not make it to the airwaves.

"That was one where we talked about orgasms, and Mary said she didn't know whether she's ever had one, and she talked about it with Tom. One station said they were afraid of it because it was so explicit, so we went along with it."

Won't Reveal Plots

Miss Lasser smiled broadly when asked if she would reveal some future plots. "Disaster, total disaster!" she replied. "But really, that's one thing I can't do. That's the whole fun of it."

Someone asked the inevitable question about Mary Hartman, the unhappy housewife, and women's liberation. "Really, a lot of people are thinking they should be liberated, but not feeling it," she said. "From what, to where? I think a lot of people are being bombarded because they can't find a viable solution for themselves. We're stuck with it; we're stuck with what we are."

And how is she—Louise Lasser—feeling, really feeling, these days? "I'm so exhausted, but I'm also very hyper," she said. "I'm very vulnerable physically right now. I'd like to write, but I'm so racing right now."

With that said, she decided to cut her news conference short and go for a walk in the lobby. "To get a little air."

Gadgets, Some Esoter For Cooks to Play Wi

By MIMI SHERATON

Because it is at least part craft, cookery inspires a seemingly array of gadgets, most of which prove to be overdesigned, overspecialized, unworkable. The following, however, are exceptions, all well worth board space they occupy and the purchase prices they command.

One of the simplest and most efficient kitchen utensils to come along in quite a while is Fat-A-Way, a graduated Pyrex beaker that takes fat away, not from your hips, but from your gravies. Pour pan juices in and, as the fat rises to the top, the greaseless juices sink to the bottom and are then poured off through the low-set spout.

In addition to this basic use, Fat-A-Way simplifies the task of clarifying butter or other solid fats by a quick and almost foolproof method described in an instruction sheet that accompanies it. Since the glass is flameproof, it can be used to boil water, and because its slender spout has a precisely formed lip, it pours water neatly into steam irons or directly onto the soil of bushy potted plants.

The plastic handle is well-angled for comfortable gripping, and if there is one improvement possible, be the addition of a lid to keep warm. A long thin brush is for thorough cleaning of this handy gadget can be from Fat-A-Way, 4895 East St. Albany, Ore. 97321. The cost, postpaid, $5.25 with the clear

While there are a number of convenient utensils with which to grate cheese in quantity for kitchen use, it is more difficult to find a practical, small grater attractive enough to go to the table where it can be used to grate cheese directly and freshly on to pasta, soup or salads.

One very satisfactory answer to that need is Mely-Roll, a substantial, plastic rotating grater that works much like a peppermill, and which now comes with its own fitted saucer to catch random flecks of cheese. Although made in bright kitchen colors such as red, blue, green and yellow, it is most elegantly ceramic-like in white. Made in Italy, and useful also for grating chocolate over desserts, the Mely-Roll is $3.75 at Maison Glass, 52 Street (FL 5-3316).

The simpler a dish is, the narrower the margin for error in producing it, and when it comes to something with as few ingredients as the classic vinaigrette dressing, all must be first rate. It seems one can get more opinions on the salt, pepper, and type of oil to use in that dressing than the vinegar, yet the relative richness and mellowness of that all-important ingredient is vital to a successful result.

For that reason, many devout food buffs have vinegar bottles, containing vinegar starters or mothers, to which they add dribblings of leftover table wines to keep the supply replenished. Nature does the rest with enzymes from the mother that turn the new wine into vinegar, a feat far less dramatic, perhaps, than the biblical changing of water into wine, but welcome nonetheless.

The Perpetual Vinegar Cask, made by Franjoh Cellars in California, offers an attractive, convenient and practical container in which to make your own vinegar, perpetually, as the name suggests.

The handmade oak cask with brass-studded hoops comes not only with a full-fledged working mother, but with a starter supply of vinegar made for the most part of red zinfandel wine and which has a mouth-puckering, tan-talizingly piquant bouquet. After that you're on your own to deepen the flavor, by using your best bordeaux and but tages, if you like.

A spigot through which can be drawn off, and a tidy refilling, are included in the package which can be ordered from Cellars, P.O. Box 7462, Stockton, Calif. 95207 for $39.95 postpaid, also a toll free number, 800-451-1111, and the purchase can be Master Charge. The cask is available in Bloomingdale's sixth floor wares department for $40.

A timbale of crisp, buttery pate brisee is the perfect, edible serving piece from which to spoon out such luxurious dishes as seafood newburgh or cardinale, breast of capon a la king, blanquette de veau or sweetbreads financiere. With a touch of sugar added to the dough, the same form can hold mold of the same metal. Be pigments retain heat rather than it, they bake dough through durably crisp crusts.

The timbale mold consists parts—a bottom shell and a fitted, cone-shaped lid or Rolled out pastry is used to dessert fillings of fruits and whipped cream or ice cream combinations.

Usually, the main difficulty in making these elegant pastry shells at home is shaping them and having the shapes hold up during baking. To overcome that difficulty, Isabel Marique, the cooking school teacher who also designed the extra-deep, black steel quiche pan, has devised Tout en Croute, a timbale recommended by the manufacturer because of possible damage to utensils caused when the sharp blades jostled in the washing process. Preferable to wipe the knife separately.

Professional chrome finished steel is suggested for

Although nothing can compare with carbon steel for sharpness, many people avoid cutlery with such blades because of the extra care required to keep that metal free of rust and stains. Anyone willing to settle for a very good second best in the interest of easy upkeep would do well to consider cutting edges, along with an occasional re honing on a carborundum stone.

The service contains a full of wide-bladed cutting knives a row slicers, plus a carving fork sharpening steel, all available at Herald Square. A small paring is $12 while a 9-inch wide-bladed is $30, which gives you an idea of the lofty price range.

the new Four Star cutlery service made of high carbon stainless steel in Solingen, West Germany by J. A. Henckels.

These hand-honed blades take the sharpest edges I have yet come across on stainless steel, and are made with extremely comfortable, firmly grippable handles of black polypropylene. Unlike carbon steel, stainless is dishwasher proof, although that method is not

al metaphors for this craftsman: Her father was an ironworker who made steps.
Now she is making silver steps and, seemingly, taking steps away from the things that held her in childhood.
She creates steps that re-code into great distances, abstracted railroad tracks that disappear into infinity, huge stairs that could only be climbed by a giant. Ex-

Spatial Games
But, alas, one has to look so closely inside the Plexiglas display boxes that hold the work, that the wonderful sweeping spatial games are almost completely missed.
Perhaps one day Miss Aguado will decide to work on the scale her conceptions deserve.

Deborah Warner's flat weavings, in natural-toned linen and fine sprays of horsehair, look very simple at first glance.

O.K., here are these ridges of woven linen rising out of the flat fabric, some with horsehair curving out of them, or cannonading out in little tufts. So what else is new?

And then you look again.
Back and forth. Up and down. And you suddenly find, by the action of your own eye, that something kinetic is being created by the differing lengths of lines, by whether they are horizontal or vertical, by their very subtle shading, by the curved opposition created by the horsehair. And everything is moving. Your muscles are tensing. You're getting a bit dizzy. You're even getting a little angry and excited. Good heavens, what is going on?

Then a visitor to the gallery remarks on how soothing the works are. And you begin to wonder. . . .
Is there something in the nature of the human eye that permits it to abstract all form into quintessential pattern?

And then feed into that essence, the emotional freight we all carry around with us?
It's worth musing over.
Debra Rapoport is only peripherally included in the show. There are a few pieces —miniatures for an artisan who creates walk-through environments—hanging in the small back gallery.

Her works are minutiae of wallpaper, tissue paper, postage stamps, film strips, cord, thread, string and baling wire, contained within each other, or set on surfaces that are set on other surfaces
. . . forms upon forms, forms, within forms.

It reminds one somehow of a precocious child playing artfully with bits out of a scrapsack. It is almost pretty, but it does not quite work.
No matter. The point about these three Deborahs, who can be seen at the Hadler Galleries, 35 East 20th Street, through Saturday, is that they are, in their very

IRN-STYLE
TOMATOES
EN PEPPER

1/2 cup white corn meal
1/2 cup flour
Salt and freshly ground
pepper to taste
Peanut, vegetable or corn oil for shallow frying
Dill pickle slices for garnish
Lemon slices for garnish
Finely shredded lettuce for garnish.

1. Preheat oven to 450 degrees.
2. Prepare the hot sauce and set aside.

3. Cut off the ends of the loaves of bread and set aside for another use. Cut the loaves in half width-wise, then slice in half lengthwise.
This will make four sandwiches. Arrange the loaves, split side up, on a large baking sheet and dot with butter.

4. Drain the oysters.
5. Combine the corn meal, flour, salt and pepper to taste. Blend well. Dredge the oysters, one at a time, in the corn meal mixture.

6. Add the oil to a skillet to a depth of about half an inch. Heat thoroughly and add half the oysters. When brownied on one side, turn and brown on the other.
Drain well. Cook and drain the remaining oysters.

7. Meanwhile, place the bread in the oven and bake until butter melts and bread is warm. It should not become too crisp.

8. Arrange the oysters on sandwich halves and serve with hot sauce and garnishes.
Yield: Four sandwiches.

HOT SAUCE
1 cup tomato ketchup
2 tablespoons mustard, preferably creole or use an imported mustard such as moutarde de Meaux
2 tablespoons horseradish
2 tablespoons freshly squeezed lemon juice
1 teaspoon or more Tabasco sauce

1 tablespoon Worcestershire sauce
Salt and freshly ground
pepper to taste.
Combine all the ingredients in a mixing bowl and blend well.
Yield: About one and one-half cups.

Dentists Will Vote On Phone Listing

By FRANCES CERRA

In New Jersey, Connecticut and 47 other states in the country, it is possible to open the Yellow Pages, look at the listings of dentists and find a specialist like an orthodontist or a dental surgeon. But open the Yellow Pages for any part of New York State, with the exception of the area around Binghamton, and it is impossible to tell the general practitioners from the specialists.

The reason for this is that all of the local dental societies in the state, with the exception of the one near Binghamton, have not allowed dentists to list, with their names, a line reading: "Practice limited to..."

This limitation by the professional societies actually has the backing of the State Board of Regents and the State Board of Dentistry, which have interpreted state laws against advertising by dentists to include such listings.

But, in a seeming contradiction, neither of those boards has moved against the Binghamton dentists apparently because no complaint has been lodged. As a result, to eliminate the loophole, the board of governors of the State of New York recently proposed an amendment to the society's code of ethics that would make such listings a breach of ethics everywhere in the state.

The 13,500 members of the society will vote on the amendment next month, and two-thirds of them are needed for approval.

But the proposal comes at a time of widespread attack on all kinds of professional restrictions against advertising, among them a suit by Dr. Joan Staker, a Sayville, L.I., orthodontist. Last month, Dr. Staker went to Federal District Court in Brooklyn on Constitutional and antitrust grounds to establish her right to list her specialty in the Yellow Pages.

Dr. Seymour Nash, executive director of the Dental Society of the State of New York, said that most on the board of governors are against listing of specialties because it could "lead to abuses like self-diagnosis by the patient, and possibly treatment by a specialist for something that is not necessary."

Dr. Nash conceded that the present system, in which patients normally get to a specialist only upon the referral of a general practitioner, holds the potential for fee-splitting, which is illegal for dentists and doctors. But he emphasized that he did not believe any such practices were common.

To Peter Shuck, a lawyer for Consumers Union, the prohibition against dentists listing their specialties "is one more example of how professions use their control over information to reduce the ability of consumers to behave rationally in the market place."

Consumers Union has filed two suits seeking to overturn such restrictions.

Consumer Week

Did you ever wish you could take a professional consumer advocate along with you when you go to the supermarket? The next best thing will be possible on April 29, when employees of the New York City Department of Consumer Affairs will conduct guided tours of two Manhattan supermarkets as part of what Mayor Beame has officially designated as Consumer Week in the city.

The tours will be conducted from 11 A.M. to 2 P.M. Anyone who wishes to go along should call 566-0094.

The highlight of Consumer Week, according to the department, will be an all-day conference at the New York Sheraton on April 27, which will feature a host of consumer, government and business leaders. Among them will be Alfred Kahn, chairman of the New York State Public Service Commission, Betty Furness, consumer reporter on WNBC-TV, John Whitney, president of Supermarkets General Corporation, owner of Pathmark Supermarkets and Felix G. Rohatyn, chairman of the Emergency Financial Control Board.

There will be morning and afternoon workshops on the following topics: new directions in providing legal services; computerized credit and banking; food issues; government regulation; energy and public utilities; the advertising, design and safety of products, and the Federal response to consumer problems. There will also be a luncheon with keynote speeches by Miss Furness and Mr. Rohatyn.

Admission to the conference, including lunch, is $12.50, except for students who may attend for $2.50, not including lunch. Persons who wish to attend must pre-register by writing to Jane Katz at the Department of Consumer Affairs, 80 Lafayette Street, New York, N.Y. 10013.

On April 30, the department will conduct a workshop at 10 A.M. on consumer abuses aimed at children. At 1 P.M., the same day, there will be a workshop for the elderly on coping with rising prices. Persons wishing to attend either session should send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to Lilly Bruck at the department. There is no charge for either workshop.

New Matches

As one inveterate smoker pointed out, the new-fangled book matches that are about to hit the marketplace won't be very popular with mothers trying to light the candles on a birthday cake, with campers starting fires or with smokers who let their matches burn down before lighting up so they don't have to inhale any sulfur fumes.

For people concerned about fire safety, however, the new matches that the Diamond International Corp. is putting into production are a welcome change. For two years, the United States Consumer Product Safety Commission has been working to develop a safety standard for matches designed to reduce the number of deaths and injuries associated with their use. The Commission estimates that during 1975, 9,500 people required hospital emergency-room treatments for match-related injuries. Among the causes of the injuries were matches dropped on clothing or home furnishings which failed to extinguish before starting a fire and children playing with them.

The commission has now proposed a standard for book matches calling for a matchbook that is child resistant in that it requires two or more sequential motions to open, or more than a certain amount of strength. The proposal also calls for matches that self-extinguish within 13 seconds rather than the 23 that most matches now require, thus the problem for campers, birthday-candle lighters, and so forth—and that have a striker on the back, among other things. The new Diamond match, trademarked "StopLite," essentially meets the proposed commission standard except for the child-resistant feature, according to a company spokesman. The company, the largest match-book maker in the country, is switching its entire production to the new kind of match; broad penetration of consumer markets is expected by fall. The spokesman said the new kind of match will be somewhat more expensive than the old kind.

STATE FACES LOSS OF MENTAL FUNDS

Federal Aid Now Requires Decentralizing Centers

By GEORGE GOODMAN Jr. The State Department of Mental Hygiene may lose $128 million in Federal reimbursements unless the Federal Government agrees to modify its new policies for treating the mentally retarded, according to Dr. Lawrence C. Kolb, State Commissioner of Mental Hygiene.

The de-institutional policy and current budget curtailments will result in reductions in employment, some of which can be accomplished through normal attrition, Dr. Kolb stated, but he added that there would also be "the necessity for small, targeted layoffs at some facilities."

At yesterday's news conference, neither Dr. Kolb nor Dr. Kevin M. Cahill, special assistant to the Governor for health affairs, would estimate the numbers of jobs affected.

However, Dr. Cahill said the State Department of Mental Hygiene is considering consolidating the department's 20 developmental centers throughout the state by 1981.

WINE TALK

Qualified Enthusiasm for '75 Bordeaux

By FRANK J. PRIAL

Each year some of the wine leading shippers prepare reports on the most recent vintage and the current market for French wines. Of them all, the best invariably is the report prepared by Peter A. Sichel, the head of the Bordeaux branch of the Sichel wine interests.

Mr. Sichel is the first to qualify enthusiasm for the 1975 vintage in Bordeaux, already hailed in other quarters as the greatest year since 1961.

"Almost certainly, some very good wines have been made," he reports, "though it would be extraordinary if, with the high rainfall of August and September, they will reach the standards of being great.

"Those vintages which are generally accepted as being great (1928, 1929, 1945 and 1961)," he says, "each had a total July to September rainfall of under 110 millimeters. Other very good vintages went up to 150 but, even allowing for the phenomena of local storms, the 229 millimeters of 1975 is a little worrying."

Magnificent Color

He notes, however, that since quantity was down—40 hectoliters to the hectare as opposed to 56 per hectare in 1973—the wines have the highest natural sugar since 1961 and magnificent color. They are high in tannin, making them extremely difficult to judge while they are still young. Describing the 1975's as "probably the most complete wines that have been made since 1966," Mr. Sichel sums them up as "a quality vintage that will require professional selection."

While Bordeaux, because of its many financial problems in recent years, has two to three years' stock on hand, Beaujolais is practically out of wine, Mr. Sichel reports.

The 1975 Beaujolais crop was the smallest since 1957 and, he says, added only seven months' requirements at the current rate of sale.

"There is only one solution: Reduce demand," he writes. "And there is only one way of doing this—increasing prices."

Quality 'Variable'

Thus, he reports, prices in the Beaujolais today are double what they were eight months ago. He is also kinder than might be expected regarding quality. He calls it "variable."

But Beaujolais is once in a while where the consumer can make his own judgment soon after the harvest and that judgment here, at least, was that the 1975 wines were quite poor. If the high prices at the shippers in France did their way here, there is simply no justification for paying them.

By comparison, Mr. Sichel says, the whites of the Beaujolais and Maconnais regions were quite good in 1975, both in quality and quantity. The best known of these wines is the Pouilly Fuisse, but the best bargain is the Macon, which is shipped to this country in considerable quantity.

It was a good year in Chablis, Mr. Sichel reports: "Not only did it escape spring frosts, but also the heavy rain and hail storms which did so much damage farther south (in Burgundy and Beaujolais). The result was sugar contents higher than have been seen for many years, a difficult fermentation and low acidity."

Should Be Excellent

While the acid may be lower than the growers would have preferred, the wines should turn out to be excellent, Mr. Sichel says.

On the Côte d'Or, he reports, 1975 was a disaster, with more than double the ordinary rainfall and gray, sunless days when the water-logged grapes rotted on the vines. But, he notes, the problems with the 1975's have tended to firm up the previously depressed market in good burgundies, which are rare in his best of years. So it might be a good time to invest in burgundies, particularly the 1973's.

A small 1975 crop in the Rhône will mean increased prices for wine from Côte-du-Rhône, too, Mr. Sichel reports. However, the increases in France are not on the same scale as those in Beaujolais and, since Rhône wines here never enjoyed the popularity of beaujolais in the United States, the chances are that it will continue to be a viable alternative when and if the beaujolais prices take off again, as they did in 1972.

Market Bas. Rises Sharply

By WILL LISSNER

The awaited rise of beef prices began last week as a result of the cost of feeding a family of four City rose substantially, 1.7 percent, the rise since Feb. 15, 1975, the City Department Affairs reported yesterday.

The 1975 rise, produced by soaring meat truckers' strike, was 3 percent. The highest was 1.6 percent on Jan. 24, 1975.

The department's 35-item market basket $1.26 more the week before. The average price of the items was 2.9 percent higher than last year at this time when Commissioner Elinor C. Guggenheimer's movement confirmed her department's beef prices would develop.

"Unfortunately, our predictions that in the number of cattle being kept in lead to higher beef prices, is beginning Commissioner Guggenheimer said.

"The bulk of the cattle that were slaughtered and sent to market in order to avoid costs have already been sold. From at least the middle of the summer it probably escalate rapidly."

The rise in beef prices was led by the average price of which rose from a pound of bottom-round roast, rose 1.5 percent to $2.01. Reflecting a rise in grain in the 5-pound sack, rose 3 cents to still 3 cents under the price a year ago.

To help shoppers cope with the rise department issued a list of foods with stable prices currently: yogurt, haddock, skimmed milk, plain yogurt, onions, celery, carrots. All provide good nutrition with calories, it noted.

The State Department of Agriculture reported that frozen turkeys under selling at 49 to 59 cents a pound while birds at 59 to 69 cents. Broilers are sold at 39 to 49 cents. Fresh asparagus and Mexico is selling mostly at 69 pound but at sales is priced at 49-59 cents

Principal Dragged From His School

NEW HAVEN, April 20 (AP)—A white elementary school principal who admitted he kicked an 11-year-old black youth last month has been dragged from his school by irate blacks.

After the latest incident yesterday, school officials told Nelson Rinaldi, principal at the predominantly black Baldwin School for two years, not to return.

Kenneth R. Redmond, a black executive assistant in the School Department, was named Mr. Rinaldi's temporary replacement.

Superintendent of Schools George Barabito told a crowd gathered at the school that he would recommend that the school board give Mr. Rinaldi another assignment. Mr. Barabito added, "He is an excellent principal whose record has been without blemish."

Mr. Rinaldi was forced from the school yesterday by about 20 people, the Superintendent said. Among them were members of the Black Coalition, the Urban League of New Haven and the Center of Advocacy Research and Planning. Mr. Barabito said. Mr. Rinaldi on March 31 broke up a fight at school and when one student involved made derogatory remarks, the principal said, "without thinking, I reacted and kicked up."

The survey found that although the overall rental vacancy rate in the city was only 2.8 percent, the vacancy rate for apartments renting for $300 or more was 5.7 percent.

NEW YORK SCHOOLS PLAN GRADE SHIFT

5th and 6th Would Return to Elementary System—Saving Would Result

the reorganization reflects the fact that the Board of Education now allocates funds to local districts by a complex formula that provides relatively more money to intermediate and junior high schools than to elementary schools.

Under the system's contract with the United Federation of Teachers, teachers in intermediate schools and junior highs—even if they teach the fifth and sixth grades—receive more preparation or free periods than teachers in elementary schools.

The reorganization would end these discrepancies, and the money thus saved, according to the plan under study, would be "used by districts to offset budget cuts that would increase class size, or to meet other local needs."

The reorganization is the subject of a "discussion paper" prepared by the staff of the School Chancellor Irving Anker. He is planning to make the paper public next week. The matter is on the agenda for next Monday's school meeting of the Board of Education and its consultative council, composed of representatives from each of the system's 32 community school boards.

Centralized Policy

Elementary, intermediate and junior high schools are operated under the jurisdiction of the local boards, although the central board set policies for the system.

After obtaining the comments of the local boards, and further study, the central board will make a determination. Opposition is expected from some of the district boards.

The changes in grade organization, the discussion paper said, would not affect the education of the children.

"Research generally supports the view," the paper said, "that it is the school program rather than the grade organization that is educationally important."

Until the mid-1960's the city was committed to a 6-3-3 grade organization. This involved six years of elementary school, three years of junior high school (covering the seventh, eighth and ninth grades) and three years of high school.

Change to 4-4-4

In May 1964 a state advisory committee recommended a change to a 4-4-4 arrangement, with a key feature being the establishment of a middle or intermediate school covering the fifth through the eighth grade.

The plan, which became city policy in 1965, was seen as a major step in improving racial integration in the school system. The middle schools were supposed to draw pupils from a wider area than the neighborhood elementary schools, so their pupil compositions, it was felt, would show a better racial balance. However, the new discussion paper noted, "population changes since 1965 have reduced the possibilities for integration" through a 4-4-4 plan.

The middle school was also supposed to offer a distinctive educational program. Whether this actually took place is still a matter of debate.

The system never fully put the new setup into effect. At first, the Board of Education said it lacked sufficient physical facilities, and later there were other problems. As a result the school system now resembles a crazy quilt of varying school organizations.

There are elementary schools that run through the fourth, fifth, sixth and—in a few instances—the eighth grade. There are three-year and four-year intermediate schools that start with the fifth or sixth grades. There are junior high schools that start with the sixth grade and run through the eighth, and others that begin with the seventh and go through the ninth.

And there are senior high schools that offer three-year or four-year programs—and of these some are academic schools, some are vocational and others are comprehensive or a combination of the two.

SCHOOLS IN CITY FACING U.S. CUTS

Financing of Disadvantaged Programs Is Imperiled

By JUDITH CUMMINGS

The New York City school system is in danger of losing more than $125 million in Federal aid it receives for the education of the disadvantaged and for adult and vocational education in the coming year because of cuts in the city's current spending for schools, according to state and Federal officials.

About $1.8 million in another program for school libraries and guidance counseling has already been withheld in the current school year because of the Board of Education's cuts in counseling services.

Funding for these programs is in jeopardy because of jeopardy because of Federal rules adopted in the 1960's that require a school district to maintain spending at basically same level as in the preceding year in order to be eligible for the money.

To Face Decision

The United States Commissioner of Education, Terrel Bell, will ultimately be faced with a decision whether to exempt New York from the rule, as a fiscal "disaster area," or make it toe the line to prevent other financially hard-pressed cities from claiming similar waivers.

"The law provides for exemption in the case of certain exceptional circumstances," Dr. Bell said in a recent interview. "This has usually been interpreted to mean earthquakes or floods. Is a financial crisis a comparable situation?"

Other Federal education officials and specialists on Capitol Hill have said that New York may merely be the most visible of a number of cities beginning to be confronted with this funding problem during a period when school spending in general is no longer growing or even declining. Seattle and St. Louis have been listed among them.

Possible Losses

New York stands to lose nearly $120 million in Title I financing for the disadvantaged, $8 million for vocational education and $2.5 million for adult education unless it obtains a waiver from Office of Education regulations, said an Allister MacKinnon, the top Federal-affairs specialist in the State Education Department.

The requirements include that local financing may decline by no more than 5 percent from one year to the next.

In adult education, for which financing is computed on a statewide basis, the city cuts have been so deep, he said, as to jeopardize the entire state's allocation, some $6 million this year. The Board of Education has effectively eliminated free adult education to save money.

Disadvantaged and vocational programs, however, are computed locally.

More than 400,000 school children in the city system are classified as disadvantaged, based on their demonstrated educational deprivation and residence in a poverty area.

Although the recently enacted Stavisky bill would require the city to restore spending to an average based on the preceding three years, its implementation will apparently come too late to affect next year's financing, he said.

State Education Commissioner, Ewald B. Nyquist, wrote to Dr. Bell last fall asking if he intended to grant a waiver regarding the library and counseling programs, which is authorized under a separate program. Dr. Bell's decision on that case will be taken as the precedent for the other programs. The state is still awaiting his decision.

Dr. Bell said that his inclination was to be "compassionate" toward New York City and its problems, but that he was under pressure from some lawmakers to refuse to grant a waiver that they fear would bring other cities to seek similar Federal help.

The local financing requirements were enacted in the first place, their argument holds, in order to prevent districts from simply replacing local money with the Federal contribution and thus cheating those who intended to benefit.

Legislation is working its way through both houses of the Congress that would modify the local-financing requirements.

One bill, sponsored by Senators Jacob K. Javits, Republican of New York, and Thomas Eagleton, Democrat of Missouri, would allow the Federal contribution to be reduced proportionate to the local share, instead of being withdrawn entirely.

A Computer Study Urges Gates For Rail Crossings

WASHINGTON, April 20 (AP)—A Federal accident-investigating agency recommended today that the Federal Government require mandatory warning lights and crossing gates at railroad crossings used by commuter trains.

The National Transportation Safety Board's recommendation was an outgrowth of its investigation into a truck-commuter train collision last June 5 that occurred between Trenton, N.J., and Philadelphia and killed three persons.

The two-car Reading commuter train was traveling 60 miles an hour when it hit a tractor-trailer truck at a crossing at Yardley, Pa.

Two crewmen and the lone passenger on the late evening train died when the truck's steel cargo smashed into the commuter car. A third crewman on the second car was injured slightly. The truck driver was not hurt.

Administrative Duties Replace Ceremony for School Trustees

Changes in the nature of boards of trustees began in the 1960's when many schools made efforts to broaden their makeup by electing women, minority group members, young alumni and even representatives of the faculty and student body to seats on their boards.

Over the eight years of my chairmanship, the office has continuously increased with the various crises that have hit the college, said Elizabeth Purcell, chairman of the board of Vassar College.

Trustees now have to be conscious of everything that pertains to the Federal Government's involvement in education, and all the ways that private schools are expected to implement public policy, he said.

Financial support for the school comes as a corollary to being a trustee, but it comes after being elected of ten times rather than before, said Thomas M. Armstrong, president of the board of trustees of the Waynflete School in Portland, Me.

Even if this takes place, the survival of the institution is in doubt. Members of the faculty who have not fled, the city are working without pay, and Mr. Schaplowsky said that the school can begin another semester in May only if the Lebanese government comes through with an $8 million long-term loan.

The American University of Beirut, which had to delay its opening this year until January, has been closed once again by the fighting in Lebanon.

The Women's College Coalition, an organization of 72 women's colleges reported yesterday that applications to member institutions were sharply higher for the second year in a row.

Decorator Murdered, Autopsy Shows

By EMANUEL PERLMUTTER

Michael Greer, the prominent interior decorator who was found dead Monday in his Park Avenue apartment with his feet bound, was murdered, according to an autopsy completed yesterday.

"Our examination has shown that he died of asphyxiation by strangulation," said Dr. Dominick J. DiMaio, the Acting Chief Medical Examiner.

The police then listed the death of the 60-year-old designer as homicide. A squad of 12 detectives from the Fourth Homicide Zone under the command of Lieut. James Power immediately went back to Mr. Greer's apartment building at 525 Park Avenue at 80th Street, for more interviews with employees and neighbors. The detectives also began a tour of cocktail lounges and restaurants in the east midtown section seeking information from anyone who might have seen Mr. Greer last Friday night, the evening when he is believed to have been murdered.

Officers working on the investigation said that Mr. Greer had had many homosexual visitors and that he had been drinking heavily in recent months. The officers were working on the theory that he might have had a casual companion who had killed him.

National Reputation Mr. Greer had a national reputation as an interior decorator. As president of the National Society of Interior Designers, he had begun the redecoration of the diplomatic reception room at the White House for President Eisenhower and had completed the assignment during the administration of President John F. Kennedy.

The slain man was found by Gilbert Mills of 330 West 58th Street and his wife when they came to see him about a party they planned to give at his apartment for their young son. He was lying in bed, face up, clad only in a blue dressing gown. His feet were bound by a red sash. The police estimated that he had been dead for three days.

The last persons who are known to have spoken to Mr. Greer were Ted Materna, a public-relations man in the interior-decorator field, and Barbara Kraus, an old friend.

Mr. Materna said Mr. Greer had phoned him Friday afternoon to tell him about a party he was planning for the Mills-Kraus said that he had called her Friday night. "He seemed to have been drinking heavily and was depressed," she recalled.

Pini Di San Miniato, who had succeeded Mr. Greer as president of the National Society of Interior Designers, said of him: "He was a generous man but self-destructive. He was very unhappy and didn't know what he wanted from life."

Mr. Greer's $1,000-a-month fifth-floor apartment was described by the police as looking "like a museum." It was lavishly furnished with French furnishings, an 18th-century tapestry, crystal obelisks and many antiques.

Detectives said that the slain decorator usually kept his door unlatched. It would thus have been possible for someone to have entered it unannounced last Friday night, the night of his death, they said.

Hollis Boy Is Found Shot Dead, Handgun Lying Near His Head

A 12-year-old Hollis, Queens, boy was found fatally shot in his bed yesterday, a 22-caliber "Saturday night special" handgun lying near his head.

The police said they suspected the wound had been self-inflicted.

They said they believed the gun was the weapon purchased by the boy's stepfather, but reportedly stolen in a burglary of the family home Monday. No notes were found.

The boy, Derrick Tyson of 112-04 Francis Lewis Boulevard, was found unconscious in his room by the stepfather, Rudolph Sconiers, who arrived home from work at 4:20 P.M., the police said. The stepfather was drawn to the boy's upstairs room by the sound of a television set, they said.

Mr. Sconiers called the police. An ambulance attendant from Flushing Hospital pronounced the boy dead at the scene.

The police said Mr. Sconiers had found the boy lying on his right side in street clothes. They said the gun had been found partly under his pillow and partly under his head. The boy had a single bullet wound in the right temple.

The police said the boy, a sixth grader, was home from school because of the Easter vacation. Both his stepfather and his mother were at work during the day, they said.

Detective Calvin Allen of the 16th Homicide Zone, who is in charge of the investigation, said that an autopsy was expected to be performed on the victim's body today from which police might establish definitely whether the boy had shot himself.

Detective Allen said the boy had never been in any trouble with the law.

TOKYO, April 20 (UPI)—Four officials of the Palestine Liberation Organization arrived today for an eight-day visit at the invitation of Prime Minister Takeo Miki's governing Liberal Democratic Party. Diplomatic sources said that the visitors might arrange with Japanese officials to establish a P.L.O. office in Tokyo.

Bridge: Reisinger Team Tournament Getting New Look This Year

By ALAN TRUSCOTT

The traditional Reisinger team championship, the prestige event of the New York tournament calendar, will have a new look next month—a very new look.

Instead of the usual knockout contest there will be an arrangement reminiscent of the repêchage method used in rowing: A team that loses in the first few rounds will have a second chance, via a Swiss teams that eventually contributes a few successful teams to the main event.

Play will start at the New York Hilton Hotel on Saturday May 22, and a big entry is expected since this revised Reisinger will appeal to those who enjoy Swiss teams as well as the top-ranked experts who favor the tough test of knockout play.

Complex Bidding Used

Two of the players who won the Reisinger last year were Matt Granovetter and Ron Rubin of New York, who have developed a complex bidding method that may start a trend among players of the top rank.

Granovetter and Rubin recently set a record by winning the monthly bidding contest in the Bridge World magazine for eight straight months. Much of their bidding follows the relay concept, in which one hand makes minimum bids while his partner continues to describe his hand.

Such sequences need to be decided like a diplomatic message. On the North-South hands shown in the diagram, however, they followed a natural route, reaching an excellent slam in the face of an opposing opening bid.

As this was a bidding competition, the two players were simply given the North-South hands and told that West had opened one heart. Granovetter, as North, made a take-out double, which is almost always the right first move for a player with a very strong hand faced with an opening bid. He followed with a cue-bid of two hearts to show his strength.

The crucial decision came on the next round, after Rubin had bid diamonds and then clubs with the South hand. This implied at least five diamonds and at least four clubs, but promised Bridge score table with North, South, West, and East hands and scores.

East and West were vulnerable. The bidding: West North East South 1 ♠ Dbl Pass 2 ♠ Pass 2 ♥ Pass 3 ♠ Pass 4 N.T. Pass 5 ♠ Pass 5 N.T. Pass 6 ♠ Pass Pass Pass

West led the heart king, nothing in the way of high-card strength.

At this point, the rival North was content to bid a safe three no-trump. Assuming that four club tricks could count nine tricks. But Granovetter was more aggressive.

Hoping that his partner held either a five-card club suit or a singleton heart, he leaped to four no-trump, asking for aces. He had decided to play six clubs if his partner held the diamond ace, and when South responded positively he even flirted with an improbable grand slam by asking for kings.

The small slam would have been precarious if South's distribution had been 2-2-5-4 or 1-3-5-4, but as it was the contract was entirely sound. After a heart lead, for example, by the imaginary West player, South wins the ace and ruffs a heart. He then enters dummy with a trump lead to ruff another heart.

With the cards as shown in the diagram the club jack has appeared singleton. It is then an easy matter to cash the club ten, enter dummy with a spade lead and draw trumps. Superficially, the slam has a 73-percent chance, but the fact that West has indicated heart length somewhat increases the danger of a bad break in clubs.

The pre-Olympic international tournament scheduled to begin this Friday has been canceled.

Angela Kinnerly of ABC Is Married

Angela Kinnerly, manager of sales development for the ABC radio network, was married in the city yesterday afternoon to Sterling Dimmitt, manager of the New York office of Dressel, Dimmitt & Andrews, executive search consultants.

The Rev. Dr. Lawrence L. Durgin, pastor of the Episcopal United Church of Christ, performed the ceremony in the rectory chapel of the Roman Catholic Church of St. Paul the Apostle.

The bride's parents are Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Kinnerly of Guernsey, Channel Islands. Her father, a Guernsey magistrate, retired as senior partner in Lee, Ockerby & Company, a London law firm.

Mr. Dimmitt is the son of Mrs. Frank W. Dimmitt of Providence, R.I., and the late Dr. Dimmitt, who was chief of staff for ophthalmology at the Rhode Island Hospital in Providence. The bridegroom graduated from Brown University and the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration. He served as a pilot with the Navy and holds the retirement rank of lieutenant commander.

Both the bride and the bridegroom were previously married and divorced.

Shakespeare in His Place

By THOMAS LASK

SHAKESPEARE AND THE REVOLUTION OF THE TIMES. By Harry Levin. 334 pages. Oxford University Press. $15.

The rather majestic title of Harry Levin's collected essays on Shakespeare and other Elizabethan dramatists does the author a disservice in a way. It suggests a volume of narrow scholarly concerns, perhaps a ponderous investigation of the upheavals in Shakespeare's day and his place in them. Mr. Levin, who teaches at Harvard, makes clear that the "revolution" refers to the changes wrought by time, and that his aim is to see Shakespeare in his time, to see him in ours, and to follow his progress from one to the other.

In doing so, he has provided some superb reading, meaty and challenging, whether he is dealing with the way Shakespeare utilizes or overcomes the limitations of his stage; the habit of dogmatic commentators to force the most capacious of poets into a single mold; why certain scenes of the plays were probably more convincingly conveyed under Elizabethan stage conditions than under ours; and why Shakespeare occupies the place he does in our consciousness. One of the essays is so insightful ("The Shakespearean Overplot") that the reader is inclined at the end of it to lean back and think through all that is implied in that short but powerful paper.

In the introduction, Professor Levin recalls two men who influenced him: George Lyman Kittredge of Harvard and Elmer Edgar Stoll of the University of Minnesota, a man now largely forgotten. Kittredge, as everyone knows, had an enormous reputation, but he was a disappointment to Levin. He does credit him, however, with concentrating on the language of the plays, glossing lines and references and bringing the students close to Elizabethan English.

Enlarging Point of View

It was Stoll, however, who enlarged the young man's view of the poet by emphasizing that the theater was Shakespeare's natural habitat, a fact not always self-evident in Kittredge's classes. Stoll put Shakespeare back into his time and showed that his work reflected the Elizabethan world view.

The influence of both of these men can still be felt in the essays. Shakespeare's language surfaces in "Shakespeare's Nomenclature," in which the connotative value of a name, the sound and texture of the syllables are shown to aid and abet the meaning of the text in the most cunning of ways. "The power of naming is intimately allied to the gift of characterization," Mr. Levin writes.

Language figures also in "Form and Sensibility in Romeo and Juliet." Mr. Levin points out how the speech of the characters alters with the ebb and flow of their feelings in such a way that one can judge the state of their emotions from the number of monosyllables in their lines.

His insistence that Shakespeare was a craftsman in his own time and not merely a classic provides interesting confrontations both with the quick and the dead: with Charles Lamb, Robert Bridges, Jan Kott. He sees no merit in the notion entertained by the first two that the plays are better considered as literary efforts than as dramatic vehicles. Bridges's argument that Shakespeare was limited, circumscribed by his audience and that this was responsible for a certain coarseness in the writing and untidiness in the structure of the plays gets no support from him. "Lightweight purists," Mr. Levin calls such critics. In the theater the plays work.

His quarrel with Jan Kott, the contemporary Polish theater critic, is of another sort. For he disapproves of the practice of reading the Shakespeare plays as current documents in the twin chronicles of Fascism and Communism. Where Mr. Kott wrenches the plays out of their orbits to fit ellipses of his own making, Professor Levin is probably right. But Mr. Kott can provide startling insights of his own.

In one chapter in "Shakespeare Our Contemporary," Mr. Kott came up against the psychologically troubling passage in "Richard III" in which Anne succumbs to the blandishments of the Richard of Gloucester, who had murdered her husband and father-in-law. Kott's commentary cited those French women who in World War II collaborated with the Germans who had just killed their fathers and husbands. It was a disturbing but striking gloss that made an improbable scene humanly possible.

"Falstaff Uncoiled" is altogether beguiling in showing how clever and resourceful Shakespeare was in making up for the limitations of the stage. The plays are full of horses of all sorts who show up in our minds but never on the stage.

"Shakespeare's Imagery," Professor Levin writes, "is so pervaded with terms of horsemanship, and his descriptive passages are such a vivid substitute for the actual appearance of horses, that we seldom miss the animals themselves." The value of the essays is that such close reading alerts the playgoer to notice those small things in Shakespeare whose effect he has felt but whose cause he has overlooked.

The finest essay in scope and fruitfulness, however, is the one referred to, "The Shakespearean Overplot," which can be defined as one "that looks backward and forward from the highest vantage-point over the broadest area, reaffirming those principles of social and cosmic order Ulysses enunciated in 'Troilus and Cressida.'"

Don't Slight Overplot

It is, if I understand it right, the moral order in which the plays take place. To lose sight of the overplot is to diminish the dimensions of the play. For a director, Professor Levin says, to give undue weight to the lovers in "Antony and Cleopatra" and to slight the overplot is to forget the primary vehicle for the assertion of public duty and higher morality.

The idea is akin to A. C. Bradley's observation that villainy is never left victorious at the close of Shakespeare's plays. The violation of the moral law leaves a fissure in the Shakespearean universe that like a geological fault closes up impressively but inexorably so that that particular evil does not endure.

"Shakespeare and the Revolution of the Times" is as impressive in detail as it is in its larger judgments. It is hard which to admire more, the scholarship contained in it or the uses to which it is put.

Running of the Bulls

Politicians like to run for re-election in rising markets. This has become such a truism that business cycle theorists can chart a predictable relationship between the coming of a national election every four years and the incumbent Administration's expansive fiscal and monetary policies. With the exception of 1960, every postwar Presidential election year has seen at least a mild economic boom.

The economy is running true to form for the Ford Administration this year. The gross national product calculated in real terms rose 7.5 percent in the first quarter, a sharper gain than almost anyone had anticipated. Consumer and business confidence have clearly begun to revive with many individuals once again buying automobiles, household appliances and other costly items. Stock prices may be shaping up into a new bull market.

Even inflation and unemployment—those twin economic nightmares—have, superficially, become less scary. The rate of inflation dropped in the first quarter to less than 4 percent, and it is now a reasonable prospect that unemployment by autumn may fall below 7 percent. Both figures are still very high compared to what used to be considered normal but they are well below the levels of recent years.

From President Ford's vantage point as a candidate for election in November, what matters is not so much the exact statistics as the trend of events. With the rate of new layoffs low and inflation apparently abating, voters are much less apt to be in an angry, punitive mood on Election Day than they would have been if the recession of 1974-75 were still inflicting its full misery.

Is President Ford justified in taking electoral credit for this recovery? Democrats in Congress observe that they gave the nation a bigger tax reduction and a bigger budget last year than Mr. Ford wanted and that without this added stimulus, the economy today would be performing less well. Administration economists counter that in such a huge economy, it is unclear whether the added stimulus made much difference.

What is clear is that what most Democrats had thought their best issue—the Ford Administration's management of a faltering economy—is fast melting away. Having planned to depict Mr. Ford as a second Herbert Hoover, they must now develop other and more complicated issues, of which there are plenty at hand, as we endeavored to demonstrate in a recent series of editorials on the subject.

However, it would be truly ironic if Mr. Ford did not get to enjoy the political benefits of the economic recovery. As the stock market soars, consumers buy and workers return to the assembly lines, Ronald Reagan hammers away at the President for his alleged delinquencies in foreign and military affairs. It is just barely possible that jobs and prices may mean so little to conservative prosperous Republican primary voters in Texas and other major states, that, beguiled by the possible loss of the Panama Canal, the growth of Soviet power, and the dangers of détente, they could turn away from the uninspiring Mr. Ford. Even when the bulls are running, the way of an incumbent President can be strewn with rocks.

Closing College Doors

In announcing his intention to leave his post of United States Commissioner of Education on Aug. 1, Terrel H. Bell cited as a major reason for his departure the imminent prospect of having to support three sons in college. Mr. Bell's new position as Commissioner of Higher Education and chief executive of the Board of Regents in his home state of Utah will pay $11,000 more than his present salary of $37,800.

Coming from this high-ranking Federal education official, an otherwise very personal decision makes a point of considerable public interest. It underscores the damaging impact of the appalling inflation in college costs. A state of affairs that makes it difficult for parents in the $37,000 income bracket to finance their children's higher education suggests outright disaster for the vast majority of American middle-class families in the $12,000 to $20,000 range who are considered too affluent for Federal or state scholarship aid.

Is it too much to expect that the Education Commissioner's personal experience might persuade the Ford Administration to open its eyes to a clear and present danger—that college gates are being shut to increasing numbers of able, middle-class young people on economic grounds alone? Nothing less is at stake than the future of an open, upwardly mobile democratic society.

India's Peace Drive

By this time there can hardly be any doubt that India's Prime Minister Indira Gandhi has embarked upon a major peace drive, an effort to improve her country's relations with all the significant nations whose ties with India have been scarred by major tensions in recent years.

It is most unlikely that mere coincidence is at work when New Delhi announces within a few days that it will exchange ambassadors with China and that it will take steps to normalize relations with Pakistan, its two principal enemies during the past decade or more. In this same period, United States Ambassador William B. Saxbe proclaims that he sees improvements in United States-Indian relations, which, he implies, justify the substantial planned program of American food and development aid to India.

Whatever its reason, this turn in Indian foreign policy has to be greeted enthusiastically by all who wish a more peaceful atmosphere in Asia. Critics will argue that Mrs. Gandhi is trying to improve her international image, which has been so badly tarnished by the dictatorship she has instituted. But even on this hypothesis Mrs. Gandhi's moves must be welcomed since the more positive India's foreign relations are, the less ground there is for continuing the extraordinarily repressive domestic measures that have been in effect in that country for the past 10 months.

The one capital where there is probably concern about Mrs. Gandhi's new activist peace policy is Moscow. For the Soviet Union, the ideal situation has been that of recent years in which an isolated India fearful of its neighbors and distrustful of the United States has looked almost alone to Moscow for aid of all kinds. In the new situation, the Soviet Union will have to recognize that India is achieving greater freedom of action as it seeks a wider variety of friends throughout the world.

Elusive Pay Freeze...

In deferring a decision on the three-week-old transit pay pact, the Emergency Financial Control Board has once again sidestepped its responsibility to clamp a tight lid on the municipal payroll as an essential part of its mandate to restore New York City to solvency.

The cost-of-living increase granted to the transit workers will seriously complicate the problems of the deficit-ridden Transit Authority, which already is talking about another fare rise. If the transit pay pattern is extended to other municipal workers, the impact on the city's fiscal plan could be devastating. Nevertheless, the control board, which is charged with overseeing the integrity of the plan, has resorted to legalisms and technicalities to avoid a ruling.

The law establishing the board last September called for a one-year "freeze" on the "salary or wages of employees of the city and employees of covered organizations," including the Transit Authority. It gave the board broad powers to enforce or modify the freeze and to extend it for the duration of a three-year emergency—an extension which the board voted without fanfare at a recent meeting. If there are ambiguities in the wording of the law, there is no obscurity about its basic mission. Its duty is to save the city—and its employees—from fiscal ruin, and that means holding the pay line as one key element.

The plain fact is that the Transit Authority, with its fares already raised beyond prudent limits and facing the prospect of diminished Federal aid, cannot afford any increased payroll costs. Even if the transit pact contained ironclad guarantees of productivity gains, which it apparently does not, all the potential savings would be needed to help close a widening gap between income and revenues—a deficit that neither city nor state has the means to overcome.

The control board's inaction on the transit pay question unfortunately fits into a pattern of evasion on the broader wage-freeze question. The board still has not ruled on last fall's costly school settlement, nor has it objected to the recent payment of increments to teachers, despite the absence of any agreement with the teachers' union on a wage deferral. And, in face of its own recent decision to extend the pay freeze, the board has not ruled on arrangements concluded by the city with most unions which would, in fact, restore the deferred wages in the fiscal year that begins July 1.

If this city and state are to survive the rough fiscal road that still lies ahead, New Yorkers need a control board that really controls, a wage freeze that stays frozen.

... Pension 'Ripoff'

There seems no end to the propensity of New York State legislators for giving away money. New York City does not have.

Latest example of legislative profligacy at the city's expense is a "sleeper" bill that was pushed through an accommodating Senate by John J. Marchi, Republican-Conservative of Staten Island. The Marchi measure would freeze into municipal pension systems a temporary provision which "presumes" that any heart ailment suffered by a police officer or fireman is service-connected, entitling him to retire on three-quarters pay regardless of age or length of service.

Since the so-called heart bill was first enacted on an annual basis six years ago, there has been a virtual epidemic of "service-connected" heart disease among police and firemen, many of whom have left city jobs to take equally demanding work elsewhere, meanwhile collecting fat municipal pensions. The resulting sharp rise in disability retirements costs the city an estimated $17 million annually.

This "classic ripoff," as the City Club has described it, has been denounced by a municipal police surgeon who has helped to administer it and who points out that policemen should have fewer heart attacks than ordinary citizens because they are more active. Both the State Pension Commission and the Mayor's Management Advisory Board have found the heart provision unjustified and have called for its elimination among recommendations for broader pension reforms.

That is the direction in which the Legislature must begin to move—toward sweeping pension revision—if this fiscally embattled city is to be relieved from the crushing burden of soaring pension costs. The Marchi bill is an intolerable retrogression to the kind of political irresponsibility which helped create the fiscal crisis in the first place. It is particularly disturbing that it comes from as normally responsible a legislator as Senator Marchi.

Greed vs. Our Democracy

To the Editor:

All this hoopla about the Bicentennial may turn out to be ill-conceived. Instead of a hymn of celebration, perhaps more appropriate would be a requiem for an ideal that seems to be dead: a truly democratic society, with justice and fairness for all.

The Teamsters' contract settlement of April 3 provokes these somber thoughts. Once more, as so often in the past, a powerfully entrenched group has flexed its muscle and done its will on the American Society and its economy. "The public be damned" seems to be the spirit of the day.

Coming at a time when unemployment is near its high for recent decades and when control over inflation is in critical balance, a settlement which gives an already highly paid group of skilled workers a cost-of-living provision plus an absolute increase of $1.65 an hour over three years plus sizable fringe benefits is strongly inflationary, economists Seidman and Greenspan to the contrary notwithstanding. I am not an economist, but I am an expert on inflation, with a dozen years of experience.

The Administration, which could have invoked the Taft-Hartley Act and called for an eighty-day cooling-off period, did nothing. Now Secretary Usery says that the settlement was in the best interests of the Teamsters (no doubt it was), of the trucking industry (perhaps) and of the country (this only in the sense that it is better to be robbed than to starve to death). Mr. Seidman says it is too early to tell whether the settlement is inflationary, that we must wait and see. Well, we'll see, all right. Unless, in the labor settlements ahead, other unions curb their appetites while the Teamsters gorge theirs, the result is not in doubt. Mr. Greenspan admits ruefully that the settlement was at the outer limit of tolerance but says it might not be inflationary this year because of the small number of contracts coming up for negotiation. Is the big problem, then, to get through this year, or past the November election?

It is not intended here to single out the Teamsters for criticism, although a group which owes most of its prosperity to an Interstate Highway System built at public expense might have shown more consideration for the hand which fed it. The criticism is meant for every power group in the nation which is ready to shut down however large a segment of the American economy to gain its selfish ends.

Greed must be curbed. Unless the multinationals, big business, financial interests, labor, professional people—all of them—curb it within their individual domains, there will arise an irresistible demand for an authoritarian government to set things straight. Should that happen, the celebration of 1976 might seem rather hollow in retrospect. [Editorial April 3.] WILLIAM WALLACE FORD Amherst, Mass., April 6, 1976

HELENA PANTALEO New York, April 12, 1976

New York, for example, is the sonic boom. The Concorde, however, has very strict regulations about where it can go over the speed of sound—which is over the sea and nowhere near New York or Washington.

I don't know of any such regulations for military planes. However, military airports are usually not so close to civilization as are civilian ones. I feel that there should be some clarification on these points, and some honest and unhypercritical decisions made—either for the SST (both military and civilian) or opposed to it, but not pro military and con civilian supersonic jets. LAURA M. WILSON Southport, Conn., April 13, 1976

Supersonic Hypocrisy

To the Editor:

It is with some amazement that I realize the Senators and Representatives who voted to ban the SST because of its effect on the ozone layer are the same people, by and large, who have voted to approve funds for the B-1 bomber—$21 billion for the production of 244 supersonic bombers. The media also has kept a low reporting profile on the fact that for more than a decade there have been regular and very numerous supersonic military flights, complete with the probability of heavy radiation from the nuclear warheads which they carry.

It seems very hypocritical to me to vote to ban one without banning the other. I feel sure that British Airways and Air France will have their Concorde running at scheduled times so that there can be strict controls maintained over the numbers of flights, height, etc., while I am not so certain that military powers in the various nations with supersonic planes flying will be so obliging.

As I understand it, the problem with supersonic planes is that at the height at which they fly (in the 60,000-foot range) the exhausts purportedly affect the ozone layer of the earth's atmosphere. This holds true for both commercial and military planes. I believe the reason that most people are protesting the SST's in

To Love a Child

To the Editor:

The April 10, New York Times carried an article on the return of four children to their mother after five years with foster parents. It is one of the most glaring acts of injustice that I have ever read about.

Their mother, Miss Wallace, does not love them or she would not have neglected them.

Their foster parents do love them, and consider their welfare.

Their mother does not mind removing them from school in the middle of the term. Their foster mother is worried about it.

At the home of Miss Wallace, who will be their father?

At their foster home they have an adopted father they love.

One of the most outrageous remarks made by the State Supreme Court's Appellate Division was that "the foster parents should not have allowed their love to grow so deep."

At what point does one stop love? The fact that the children will not be allowed even to see their foster-parents is cruel. To separate them (sending two to a new foster-home, and two to their mother) is inhuman.

How will Miss Wallace bring up four daughters who do not wish to live with her? ELIZABETH MCGHEE New Canaan, Conn., April 13, 1976

Of Education and Racism

To the Editor:

Ronald Rubin's attack on the City University Graduate School [Op-Ed April 10] displays both racism and ignorance. When he argues that we should support "the minority-member high school graduate seeking to become a beginning civil servant" but not "the doctoral candidate in Renaissance history," his clearly racist assumption is that members of minorities are incapable of doing more than low-level clerical work. Should black and Spanish-speaking students, women and older persons be denied a chance to become scholars, scientists and college professors if they have the interest and ability? The CUNY Graduate School serves a much greater proportion of such students than any other major graduate institution. Does Mr. Rubin believe that these students, virtually all of whom have to work part-time to support themselves, can afford to transfer to New York University or Columbia, with their dwindling scholarship funds? If so, he must be completely out of touch with academic and economic reality.

Loch Ness Leivity

To the Editor:

Your recent reporting on the Loch Ness monster in daily and Sunday editions of The Times has elicited comments from pundits. Eric Sevareid stated that "there must be something in it" if The New York Times took recent reports seriously.

The April 11 Week in Review tells us that the British naturalist Sir Peter Scott suggested the designation "nessiteras rhombopteryx" for Loch Ness "endangered species," so that recognition could be secured to bring it under British laws protecting wild animals.

Since an anagram of "nessiteras rhombopteryx" is "Monster Hoax by Sir Peter S.," what we really need is protection of newspapers from "leg-pulling" scientists. A. J. GRACIA Southbury, Conn., April 12, 1976

Torture in Iran: 'It Is a Hell Made by One Man for Another Man'

By Reza Baraheni

He looked at my wife. "Madam," he said, "we'll bring the professor back in two hours." Nobody said a word.

Their two hours means 102 days, and sometimes the whole of eternity. And once you are out of their prisons, that is, if you are out at all, you are so different that neither you nor anyone who knew you before can tell for sure whether it's actually you who have come forth from the dead.

The double chin, the protruding globe of a belly rising right from below the double chin, the yellowing teeth with one or two teeth studded in gold, and the fists ever ready to rain their blows upon their opponent, and the instruments hanging from the walls convinced me at a glance that I was in for something I had not expected in my life. It was a sudden revelation with both sudden and gradual consequences.

"The him up," Dr. Azudi ordered his men, and turning to me he said: "Go and lie down!" There was a bed on the floor. There were also two other iron beds, one on top of the other, in another corner of the room. These last two, I later learned, were used to burn the backs, generally the buttocks, of the prisoners. They tie you to the upper bed on your back, and with the heat coming from a torch or a small heater they burn your back in order to extract information. Sometimes the burning is extended to the spine, as a result of which paralysis is certain.

There were also all sizes of whips hanging from nails on the walls. Electric prods stood on little stools. The nail-plucking instrument stood on the far side.

The gallows stood on the other side. They hang you upside down and then someone beats you with a club on your legs, or uses the electric prod on your chest or your genitals, or they lower you down, pull your pants up and one of them tries to rape you while you are still hanging upside down.

There were in the other torture rooms worse instruments which other prisoners would describe: the weight-cuffs that break your shoulders in less than two hours of horrible torture; the electric shock instrument, apparently a recent introduction into the Iranian torture industry; and the pressure device which imposes pressure upon the skull to the extent that you either tell them what they want or let your bones break into pieces.

When the whip came down it was like a huge, hot charcoal, live, burning and tearing at the soles of the feet, crippling the whole legs. I was screaming at the top of my voice. Now I could understand the meaning of the screams of the other people the night before. These screams stayed with me for 102 days, and when I left the prison, they didn't leave me.

Once, months later, when I called my interrogator to tell him that I wanted to leave Teheran for a few days, as soon as he picked up the receiver the same nauseating, pleading and pitiable screams could be heard over the telephone. The telephone number was 320773. Everyone is welcome to ring up and hear some genuine screaming.

In only a few hours the torture chamber takes you back to the primeval forest with fear as the only reigning monarch. The meaning of life departs, and you are suspended in a stupid void in which you are totally alone, desperately alone.

The hell is with you until you disappear and then, somehow, it moves on in the eternity of its own infernal presence; because, after all, it might go on living after you cease to exist.

You write because you think that you can get rid of torture through writing about it. That may be the first urge. But the second urge arises from a more humane source. You write because you think that torture and oppression were made by man and can only be destroyed by man.

Having come out of that hell, I know that there is nothing supernatural about it. It is a hell made by one man for another man, and it should be, must be, destroyed by man.

Unrest In France's Academe

By C. L. Sulzberger

PARIS—The 1968 French student uprising almost overthrew President de Gaulle's regime and, indeed, wounded it so seriously that some months later, the general abruptly resigned and retired from public life.

Now another wave of university manifestations has begun and the question is widely asked: Is the nation on the verge of a repeat performance? The answer is almost certainly no. The problem today is less critical than it was eight years ago, even though it is also more serious.

In 1968 there was an explosion by undergraduates against the archaic system of administering universities. And, as their demonstrations gathered force and violence, other discontented elements decided to join in.

Among these were organized labor, various left-wing or liberal parties, which never accepted de Gaulle's ideology, as well as a hard core of right-wing anti-Gaullists who had refused to accept his Algerian independence policy. The latter even infiltrated a few armed agents into student lodgings.

For reasons having nothing to do with undergraduate protests, the oppositional movement gathered powerful support that rendered the situation far more critical than it is now likely to become. This time, unlike eight years ago, it is not expected that unions will back the students and thereby precipitate major crisis.

Virtually all Frenchmen know there is a big problem in the universities whose student population was suddenly swollen from 300,000 to 800,000 after the 1968 difficulties. The figures officially tabulated aren't exact since many young people only list themselves most of the year as "students" to benefit from privileges like cheap meals.

Nevertheless, almost 200,000 graduate annually from France's 76 universities and, armed with diplomas and great expectations, demand jobs. But about one million people or 4.7 percent of the labor force are unemployed, the highest figure since World War II. Since most diplomas are granted in the liberal arts and most students expect Government jobs (mainly as teachers), they find themselves increasingly out of luck.

Ten or fifteen years ago about 80 percent of graduates did get state-paid positions; now only 30 percent. Therefore, although diplomas are supposed to betoken learning, status and a job-ticket, the universities are now in fact engaged in wholesale manufacture of social misfits.

How the issue is resolved must determine the potential of France's next generation. The students themselves show no desire to adjust their curriculums to hard facts of life. Since 1968 they have participated in the administration of universities through elected student bodies but the latter haven't responded realistically.

The extreme left (Trotskyists, Maoists, etc.) boycotts the elections of representatives and the moderate "silent majority" is too uninterested to participate effectively. This leaves the well-organized Communists—regarded as "bourgeois" by the far left—in virtual control of student representation.

However, progress of the Socialist-Communist alliance on France's national scene inhibits its sponsorship of university violence. It is committed to seeking an electoral road to governmental power and doesn't want the chances damaged by student riots.

Therefore, paradoxically, the stronger the left alliance becomes in national politics, the less the possibility of serious university violence. Nor is the general public sympathetic to protesting students as it was eight years ago. One underlying problem is that all 76 universities are officially listed as on a par, much as if Harvard and Slippery Rock were considered equal, regardless of disparate faculty and student levels. The state controls entrance qualifications and examinations plus issuance of diplomas, which is not an autonomous responsibility of each university.

This system is self-paralyzing; some institutions' diplomas are clearly more equal than others. The universities talk about the need for individual autonomy but fear to practice it. The weaker ones would immediately be exposed as such if no longer shielded by the anonymity of total state control of all educational requirements.

The Government wants the business world to be consulted on what job opportunities lie ahead so new curriculums could be proposed, reducing reliance on the humanities. But most youngsters consider such a pragmatic option as demeaning.

Stalemate is the result. The existing educational machine is counterproductive in terms of French society's needs. Prodded by their own well-organized minority, the students agitate against practical reform, meanwhile risking debilitation of French society in coming years.

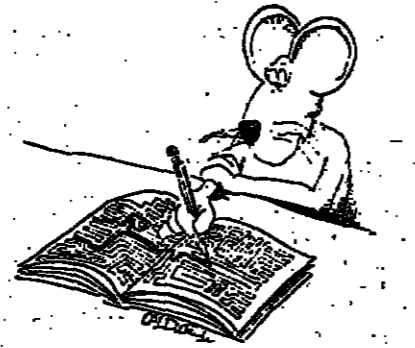

But the political parties with which that organized minority is associated do everything in their power to prevent university discontent from exploding against the Government itself—as it did against a far stronger Government in 1968.

Budgetary Realities

By Harrison J. Goldin

New circumstances tend to generate new and often confusing language. "Backloading" is not a better way to put freight on trucks; "stretch-out" is not a miracle undergarment fabric. Both terms express the wishful thinking of some people that New York City can still, at this late date, put off into the future the far-reaching and painful reordering of the way it raises and spends money that is essential to the development by July 1, 1977 of a budget in which expenditures do not exceed revenues.

The arguments for delaying budget cuts are strong and appealing: fewer employees, who would be condemned to joblessness will have to be let go; private institutions receiving aid from the city will have more time to make alternative arrangements as municipal support is cut back; Federal and New York State matching programs can be sustained a while longer.

But such arguments, despite their appeal, have a fatal flaw. They do not deal with the fact that delaying a balanced budget beyond the next fifteen months will produce levels of spending for which no cash exists and no cash can be found. The Federal Government is hostile; the state doesn't have it; we now know that trying to tax to raise it will only accelerate its flight; nobody will lend it.

A convulsive effort last November and December led to a $6.8 billion credit package calculated as sufficient to carry the city through the three-year period of budget balancing, and not beyond. It requires rapid progress toward the achievement of actual parity between expenditures and revenues by fiscal 1978.

Any backloading—the deferral of scheduled budget cuts to the third year of the budget-balancing period—or stretch-out—the extension of that period beyond three years—would result in additional costs that the city has no assured way to cover.

Before this year's cuts, the city's expense budget was roughly $1.2 billion in the red. But the credit package will give the city only $1 billion this year to meet the deficit that's why $200 million had to be cut by the expiration of the current fiscal year on June 30.

In the new fiscal year, starting July 1, the city would, without further cuts, enter the year with a $1 billion deficit ($200 million of the $1.2-billion starting deficit having already been cut this year); but the $6.8 billion package provides that of the $1 billion gap between revenues and expenditures only $470 million will be covered next year.

Hence, while $470 million of the billion dollar deficit will be covered next year by cash from the credit package, the remaining $530 million of the deficit must be eliminated through cuts.

By the same token, the city would—without more cuts—enter the last year of the plan on July 1, 1977, with a $470 million final deficit, except that the plan makes no cash available to subsidize an operating deficit that year. That is why the remaining $470 million deficit requires equivalent cuts in that amount for that year; void, a balanced budget in the third year.

Proponents of backloading and stretch-out apparently believe that some new source of large-scale financing will appear, possibly from Washington, to enable the city to live with its deficit. But even if a sympathetic new President takes office on Jan. 20, 1977, that would hardly provide time to enable the city to avoid the cuts scheduled for even the third year of the financial plan, starting on July 1, 1977, not to speak of the fiscal year starting July 1, 1978.

With nine months of its crucial three-year grace period already gone, the city does itself a disservice by indulging in hopes that will not be fulfilled. It creates false expectations that the timely balancing of its budget can be avoided. It disappoints and frustrates its friends, arms its enemies, contributes to the further impairment of its own credibility, and feeds the discontent among those in Congress who never liked the idea of even temporary, limited assistance in the first place.

Can $1 billion be cut from the expense budget without tearing the city apart? Until the city has demonstrated that it has fundamentally re-rationalized how it spends money and the way it delivers services, it won't have the standing or credibility to make the assertion. So it ought to get on quickly with the job—not of mindless percentage cuts by departments, 2 percent here, 5 percent there, 3 percent here—but of fundamental restructuring. The city's survival, and its capacity to present the case it deserves to be able to make for greater Federal help, depend on it.

This man's crime made him a hero.

In 1735 printing the truth was a crime. The press was free only so long as it didn't offend anyone in power.

Then along came John Peter Zenger. A German immigrant. A naive man in his way because he listened to people who pleaded with him to print criticism of the government. And when he did what they asked he was jailed and brought to trial. His crime, printing the truth.

Of course, today Zenger is a hero. But his heroism has been muted by the years. His story retold so often it's become a cliché. Like the words truth and freedom. Giant words, thrown about so lightly that they now seem vague and emptied of their promise.

Truth and freedom are the heart and soul of a free society. The people of this country have a constitutional right to know the truth. And at Knight-Ridder Newspapers we feel it our responsibility to give it to them. Fairly and accurately. We also believe in a free press as the necessary protection of our other freedoms. And naturally we believe that each one of our newspapers must be free. Completely free to serve its own community in its own way. All of us understand the importance of truth and freedom. And we hope there will always be men like John Peter Zenger with the kind of courage it takes to give these words their real meaning.

TRANSIT OPINION SLOW IN COMING

Lefkowitz Requires Copy of Actual Contract Before Ruling on Wage Rise

By FRANCIS X. CLINES
 Attorney General Louis J. Lefkowitz said yesterday that he would be unable to issue an opinion on the controversial wage rise in the transit workers' agreement until he had obtained a copy of the proposed contract—a document that the Transit Authority said did not yet exist in final form.

A spokesman for the Transit Authority said that legal specialists were working hard to produce the final document, but that there was no way of saying when it would be ready.

In the past, this has taken as much as three months, one official said.

Stephen Berger, the staff director of the state's Emergency Financial Control Board, which is studying the agreement, said he might try to deal with this latest snag in the transit issue by producing pertinent wage language in the existing contract as an alternative for the Attorney General. But Mr. Lefkowitz said he could only issue a ruling on the basis of the actual new contract.

The Attorney General has been thrust into a prominent position in the labor controversy by Governor Carey's call on him for a legal opinion on whether the cost-of-living provision in the agreement was legally permissible in the city's fiscal emergency. The emergency law generally prohibits wage increases.

Verbal Summaries Out

The Attorney General said he had declined to offer an opinion on the basis of verbal summaries of the pact by way of the Control Board. Mr. Lefkowitz put it this way: "I said, 'Let's have that contract.' I want to study both the cost-of-living language and the productivity provisions."

The latter point referred to the agreement's understanding that the money to pay for the wage rise was to come from increased productivity by workers.

The issue is particularly sensitive—as the politicians involved have indicated—since rejection of the agreement could trigger a strike by the Transport Workers Union in July. At the same time, Mayor Beame has cautioned that the wage rise proposed for transit workers could ruin the city's austerity plan if other unions sought to make a pattern of the settlement.

Governor Carey, as chairman of the Control Board, which now supervises the city's fiscal responsibilities, has said he hopes to have the board's consideration of the transit contract completed by May 1.

Mr. Berger said he was working to meet that deadline. Mr. Lefkowitz's desire to see the actual contract language is "not unreasonable," Mr. Berger said. And while the Transit Authority's need for time to complete the intricate work on the contract was understandable, "it cannot become the basis for endless procrastination," he said.

O'Dwyer Criticizes Board

Meanwhile, City Council President Paul O'Dwyer criticized the Control Board, contending that its refusal to be part of the collective-bargaining process on the transit agreement was impractical and "quite mischievous," since the board has the power to reject the pact.

"The real party and interest which wields the financial power is nowhere around the bargaining table," Mr. O'Dwyer asserted. Mr. Berger has said consistently that the state emergency law provided for the Control Board to rule on the overall fiscal implications of contracts, but not to get involved in the detailed bargaining.

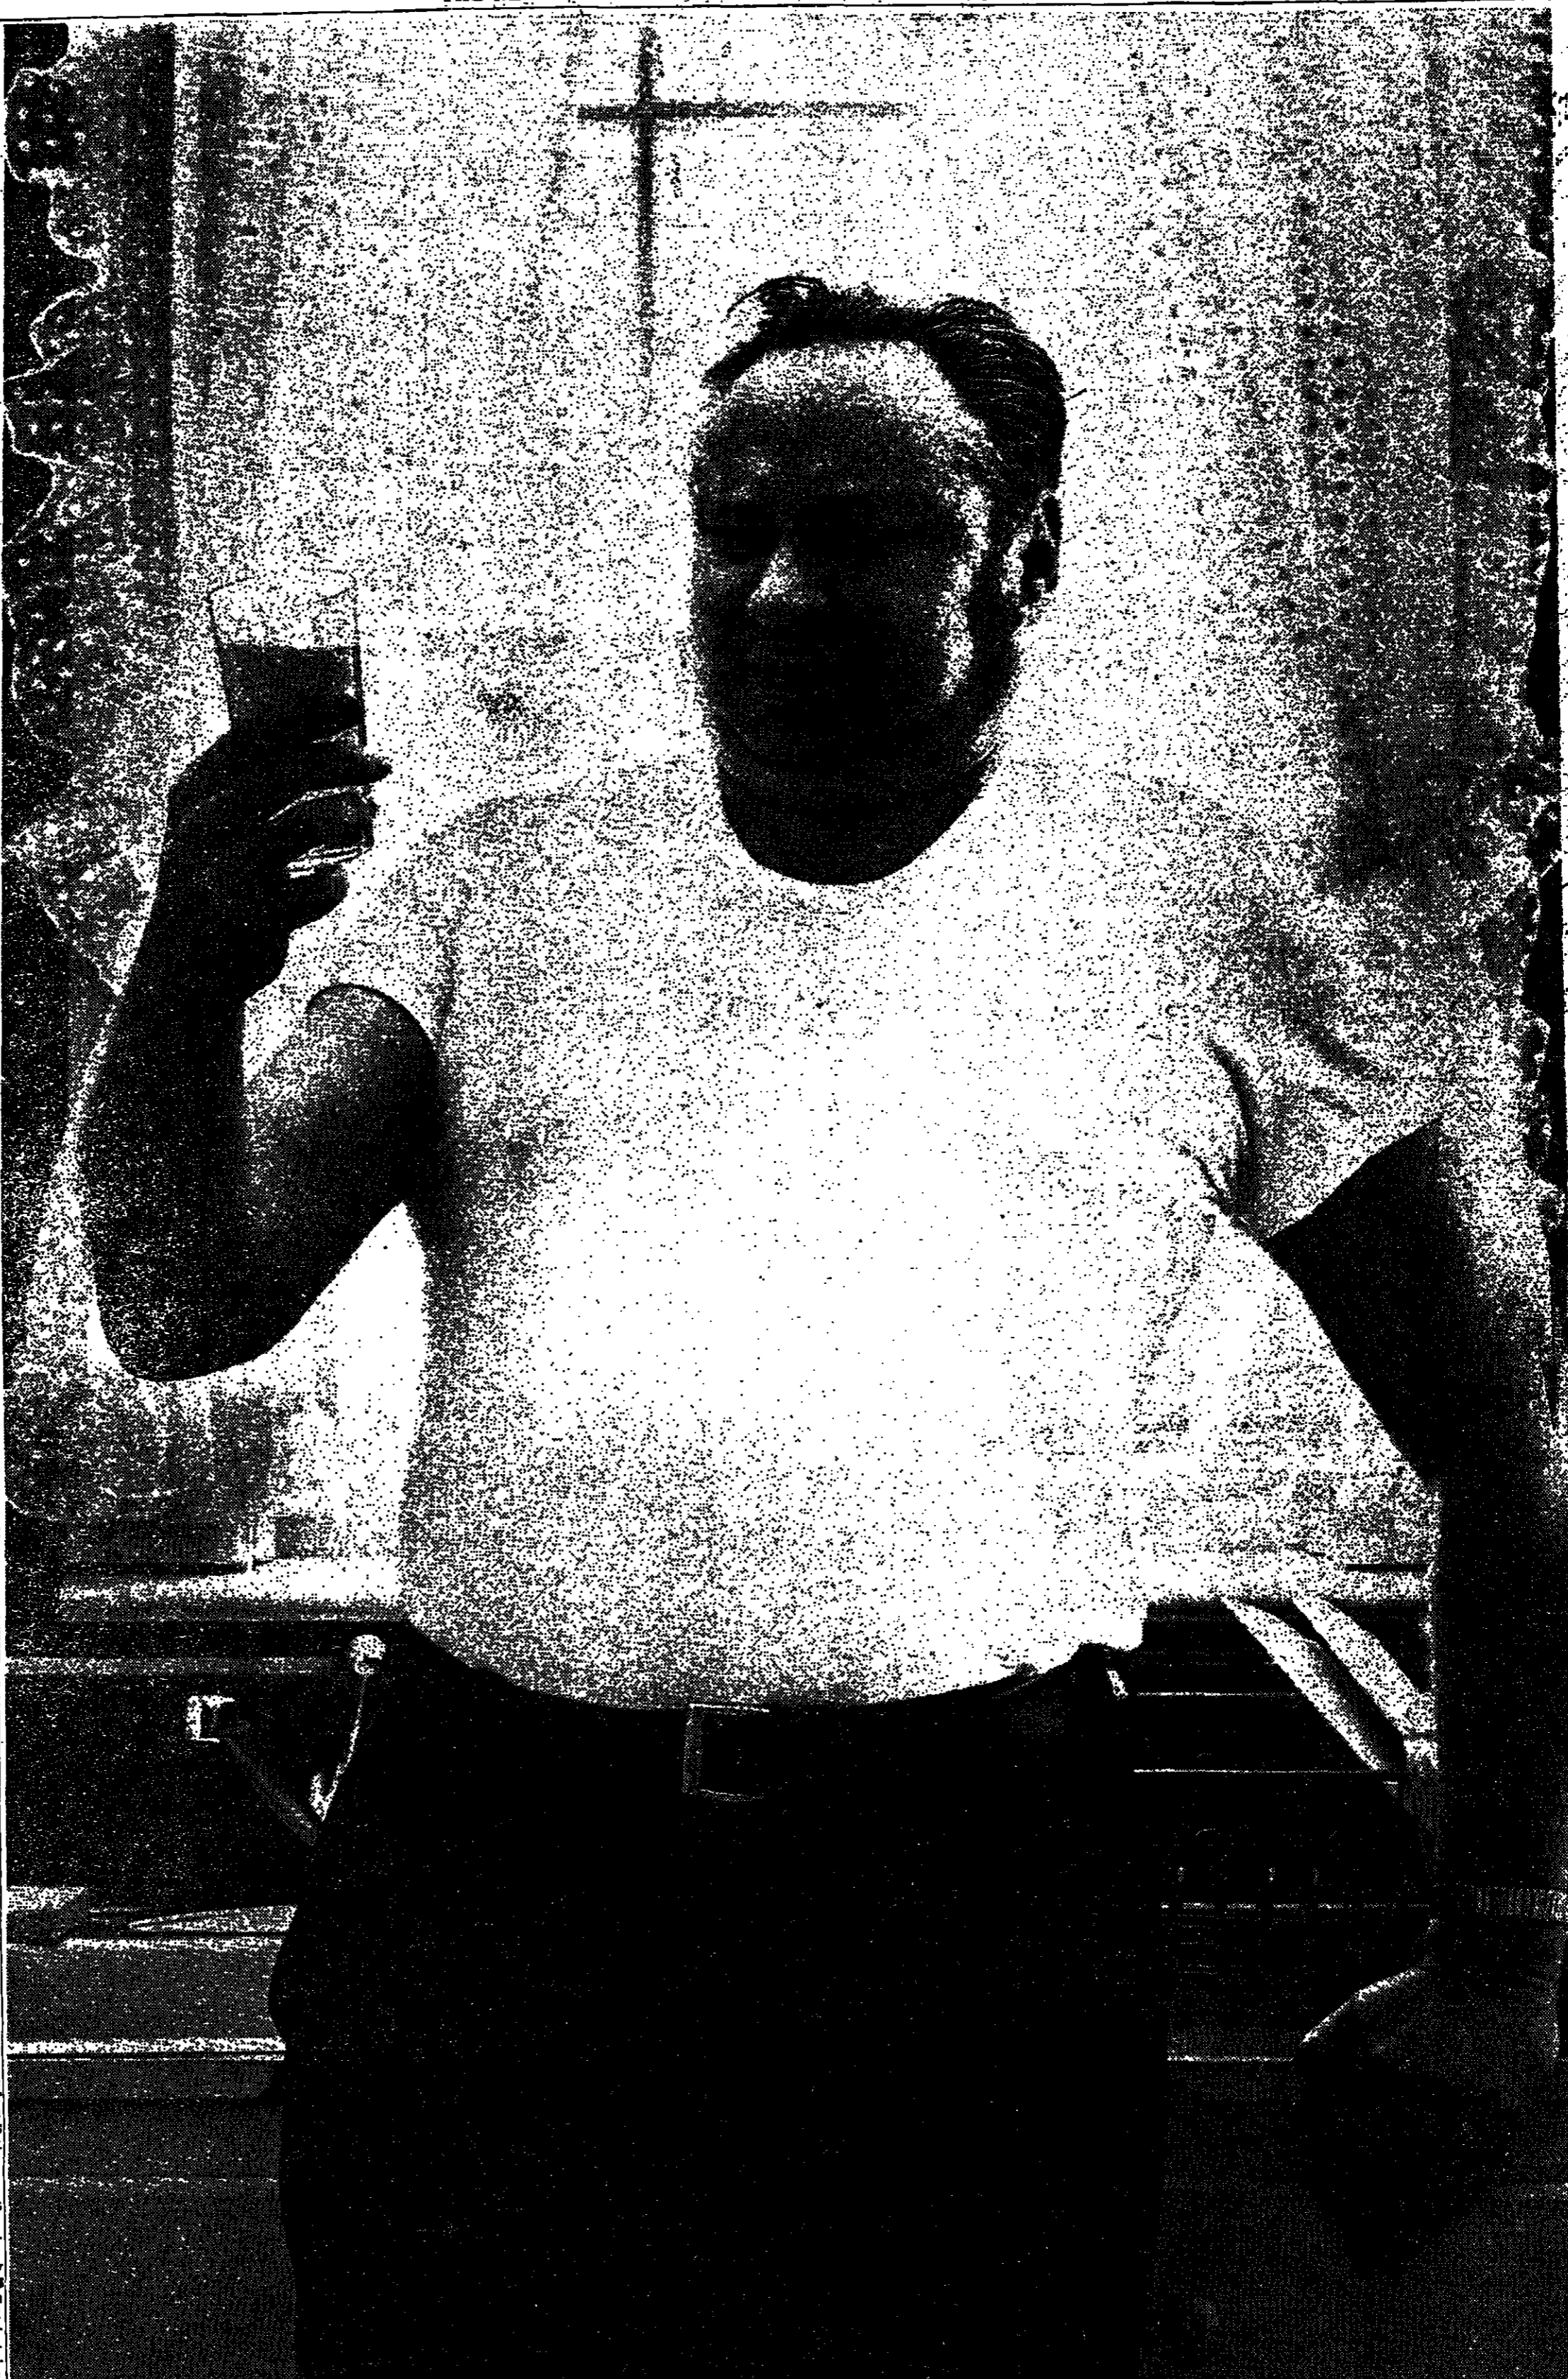

The city's Corporation Counsel and the Control Board's labor counsel both feel that the transit agreement's cost-of-living provision is not permissible under the emergency wage freeze. The law provides for cost-of-living increases to certain unions that cooperated last year with the city in deferring regular salary increases until after the emergency eases.

The proposed transit agreement would increase the existing living-cost factor by 25 percent, providing one cent more an hour for each increase of three-tenths of a point in the Consumer Price Index. The proposed agreement makes no mention of a wage deferral.

Federal Agency to Revise 200 to 250 Safety Rules

WASHINGTON, April 20 (AP)—The Occupational Safety and Health Administration said yesterday that it was going to revise from 200 to 250 standards adopted when it was founded in 1970. It said it would hold public hearings around the country to provide business, labor and the general public a chance to comment on how to improve the rules.

Dr. Morton Corn, an Assistant Secretary of Labor who directs the agency, acknowledged that many regulations had proved to be nuisances, irrelevant or of marginal value.

A surprise on tap that's worth millions.

If you've ever drawn yourself a cold drink with a foamy "head" — and the tap was the cold-water faucet of your own kitchen sink — you know why Congress passed the Clean Water Act. It authorized $18 billion for municipal water treatment.

That was back in 1972, when a far-sighted company named Envirotech was ready with a new, industrial category called "the anti-pollution business." They looked forward to cleaning up. In more ways than one.

By 1974, however, low-profit margins and high-cost escalation were beginning to sink their stocks out of sight. But they got their heads above water again. How they did it, through diversification, and how President Ford's release of a still-uncommitted $9 billion for waste-water treatment helped put them on stream, are covered in a recent Forbes article called "Up and Down with Envirotech."

It's the kind of lively, informative reading that explains why Forbes' top-management audience keeps deeply involved, issue after issue.

Why Forbes last year went ahead of Fortune in advertising pages.

Why Forbes is the only leading business or news magazine that was up in advertising pages in 1977. Why Forbes, in the first four months of 1976, up an unprecedented 23% in advertising pages over the same period in record-breaking 1975.

And it's why more of America's top-corporate executives read Forbes regularly than any other major business or news magazine. They know that Forbes has a winning knack for delving into even the murkiest subjects.

And clearing things up.

That Set on the Empire casts a Shadow on Gurkhas

KATMANDU, Nepal—Lance Cpl. Dhyani Rai, a tough little soldier from the eastern Himalayas, is serving in a long and proud tradition that he fears may be fading away.

A Gurkha infantryman in the British Army, Corporal Rai is as steadfast a warrior as the others in the long line of men that stretches back 150 years. But he knows that the steady decline in the number of Gurkha troops raises doubts about the future of this legendary fighting force.

"You hear some talk that the British don't need us any more," said Corporal Rai, who was in Katmandu on leave from Hong Kong, where he patrols the Chinese border.

"Maybe it's true, and they won't need us forever. But certainly it is a service that I am proud to do."

Corporal Rai is one of 6,500 Nepalese men serving in the British Army under an agreement that dates from the early 19th century, when the British Army in India recruited the mountain troops of this independent kingdom on India's northern border.

According to colonial historians, the British decided they wanted the Gurkhas on their side after the Gurkhas had very nearly beaten them in a crucial mountain battle. They have been fighting for Britain ever since, from Ypres to El Alamein from the Persian desert to the jungles of Borneo.

The word Gurkha, the name of a province of Nepal in which members of the radical group had settled, became the name of the force, and it subsequently acquired world renown for valor and sometimes ruthlessness in battle. In a typical appraisal, a British commander in World War I wrote:

"The soldier from Nepal has a big heart in a small body. He will return if he can to a trench from which he has been driven, and it will not be easy to turn him out a second time. Taciturn by nature, brave and loyal, the Gurkhas ended, as I knew they would, second to none."

In the years, legends have followed the Gurkhas through the world's battlefields, such as the story of a patrol that came upon four German soldiers sleeping in a foxhole in Italy during World War II. Drawing their kukris, the traditional curved daggers that they still wear as standard equipment, the Gurkhas beheaded two of the Germans but left the other two unharmed, to spread terror.

At the end of the World War II, the strength of the Gurkha battalions stood at 50,000. But postwar demobilization coincided with the independence of India and the end of the old British Army there, and the Gurkha force serving Britain was gradually reduced.

Now it is to be cut again, 6,000 men, in a total British Army of 170,000. Some people in Lance Cpl. Dhyani Rai, a Gurkha infantryman who serves the British in Hong Kong, where he patrols the Chinese border.

Britain are pressing for an abandonment of the Gurkha recruiting altogether.

"It's a relic of our past, when we had our imperial fingers in pies all over the world," said one Englishman. "But those days are over."

There is also uneasiness in some circles about the view of the Gurkhas as mercenary soldiers. Nepalese and British here are still indignant about a remark made a few months ago by Daniel P. Moynihan, then the chief United States delegate to the United Nations, who referred to the Cuban troops fighting in Angola as the Soviet Union's "Gurkha soldiers."

The Nepalese Government is generally happy to have its citizens serving with the British and is distressed that the recruiting has dwindled to 300 men a year, who are chosen from several thousand applicants.

The principal reason for this official attitude is Nepal's poverty. The $5 million a year in salaries and pensions paid the Gurkhas was Nepal's largest source of foreign exchange until just a couple of years ago, when tourism surpassed it.

Not Used in Ulster

With the empire all but gone, there is, of course, much less for the five remaining Gurkha infantry battalions to do. Presumably for domestic political reasons, the Gurkhas are not sent to Northern Ireland, Britain's major military theater now. And some of their officers say privately that a settlement in Ulster would, by releasing British troops there, bring even more pressure to disband the Gurkhas.

Like Corporal Rai, a member of the 10th Princess Mary's own Gurkha Rifles, most Gurkhas are serving in Hong Kong, doing border patrol duty and security work, for which they are paid considerably less than native British troops would receive.

Corporal Rai, who has been in the Gurkhas for 12 years, earns $72 a month, a very substantial wage by Nepalese standards, and he sends a good part of it home to his village, Ratanacha, which is eight days' walk from the nearest road. In a few more years, when he is about 35, he thinks he will probably take his pension and go back to Ratanacha, which is 100 miles southeast of Mount Everest, to grow rice on the carefully terraced Himalayan slopes.

Some Gurkhas have found it difficult to readjust to the mean mountain village that met them of them come from. But Corporal Rai, whose father and older brother are both veterans, says that they are quite happy back at home with their pensions and their memories, and he can be too.

"We'll sit around sometimes, the way my father does now, and recall our days serving in the Gurkha regiments, fighting the enemy and seeing the world," he said with a fond smile. "We'll be so proud to have made it, and glad for those memories which we won't soon forget."

Pilots Bid U. S. Ban Smoking in Cockpit As Aviation Hazard

WASHINGTON, April 20 (AP)
A group of commercial airline pilots and two organizations concerned with the public interest petitioned the Federal Government today to ban smoking in the cockpit as a "particular hazard in aviation."

The petition to the Federal Aviation Administration also requested a Government rule prohibiting smoking by any member of the flight crew within eight hours of take-off.

A report accompanying the petition said that smoking in the cockpit, by the pilot or any other crew member, "significantly interferes with the physical and mental abilities of pilots need to operate at maximum performance levels."

The petition was submitted by Ralph Nader's Health Research Group, the Aviation Consumer Action Project and the Airline Pilots Committee of 76, representing 76 pilots from Eastern, United, Continental, Delta, Braniff, Pan American and National Airlines.

The 52-page report, "Smoking: Its Adverse Effects on Airline Pilot Performance," was prepared by the Health Research Group.

Carbon monoxide in tobacco smoke, magnified by high-altitude flying, impairs the performance of crew members, the report said.

"The major impaired abilities include visual acuity, visual brightness threshold, reaction time to visual and auditory stimuli, vigilance, psychomotor coordination, manual dexterity and ability to make judgments and take action under stress," it said.

lems now. We get some customers from over there and they are a nice class of people." "What happened was this," said one city official familiar with the situation. "A lot of the wealthier middle-class people—those who could afford it—panicked when the project was first proposed and moved away. Then the landlords panicked and brought in some pretty undesirable tenants. Other old-time Forest Hills people became convinced the area was going to rot, and they went too."

promise. It is not scatter-site and it's not for the really poor. "I had to compromise. I wanted a higher percentage of blacks. But if you killed the project entirely, then you'd be saying that Jimmy Carter is saying—that no one is going to defile the ethnic purity of these neighborhoods." "I regard Forest Hills as a victory for rationality. It is not a victory for everybody to death. They never took another step after that."

But some black community leaders remain convinced that the Forest Hill compromises went too far in ignoring the poor of the city slums. Vernon E. Jordan Jr., executive director of the National Urban League, said, when the Cuomo compromise was adopted: "So long as local officials control over low-income housing sites, antiblack pressures will prevail. Lost in the charade over Forest Hills is the basic question: Where do poor people who need decent housing go?"

- Californian on Trial for L.I. Robbery
Gaylord Anguish, a 33-year-old Californian who allegedly committed to New York to commit five Long Island bank robberies, went on trial in Federal court in Brooklyn on charges of taking $8,400 at gunpoint from a Bankers Trust Company branch in Commack, L.I. The defendant's lawyer, John Corbett, argued before the jury that Mr. Anguish was not responsible for any criminal conduct because he was mentally ill at the time, and now has amnesia which blocks off any memory of the event.
- Writ Issued on Sydenham Closing
A group of Harlem residents, seeking to prevent the closing of Sydenham Hospital on May 21, for economy reasons, were granted a show-cause order yesterday in State Supreme Court. The city, the state and the Health and Hospitals Corporation must explain in court next Monday why the hospital, at 123d Street and Manhattan Avenue in central Harlem, must be closed.
- 3 Boys Held in Setting of School Fires
Three boys, two of them 11 years old and the other 8, have been charged with setting two separate fires in the girls' gymnasium at the Glen Cove High School on Long Island. The interior of the gym was destroyed and the damage was estimated at $500,000. The boys, charged with juvenile delinquency, will be arraigned in Nassau County Court.
- Format of Colossus Lottery in Doubt
A decision handed down in State Supreme Court has left in doubt the format of the state's Colossus Lottery, scheduled for Oct. 31, in which more than $1 million left over from previous lotteries was to be distributed. Justice Abraham J. Gellinoff upheld an injunction limiting winning numbers to the numbers on sold tickets. The Colossus Lottery was to use seven random numbers to determine the winners.
- 4 Firemen Hurt in Queens Blaze
Four firemen were injured in fighting a three-alarm fire that spread through nine stores in one-story buildings on 43d Avenue, from 48th to 49th Streets, in Long Island City, Queens. Two of the firemen were treated at the scene and the others were taken to the City Hospital Center at Elmhurst, suffering from heat, exhaustion and smoke inhalation. Their condition was described as not serious.
- From the Police Blotter:
Two men wearing red ski masks entered the office of a diamond dealer at 15 West 47th Street, handcuffed the dealer, Stanley Nathanson, 56 years old, to a table, and made off with an estimated $200,000 worth of loose cut and uncut diamonds. The armed robbers entered the office with a key. Two branches of Citibank were held up—one at 686 Broadway at 2:15 P.M. and another at 2100 Grand Concourse, the Bronx, at 2:43 P.M. in neither case was the amount of money taken known. Alvin Forster, 28, was shot twice by two unidentified men during a dispute at West 135th Street and Lenox Avenue. Mr. Forster was taken to Harlem Hospital in serious condition. His assailants fled.

Boston Marathon Proves Fun Event for Tennis Pro

Jim McManus

By TONY KORNHEISER
Special to The New York Times
BOSTON, April 20—The annual madness is past; the Boston Marathon is run, and the city is back to normal. Traffic flows over the streets of the 26-mile, 385-yard course again. People have put down their garden hoses and returned to work, because there are no more overheated runners to cool off. The runners are gone. Jim McManus was one of the first to leave. The 35-year-old former world class tennis player caught the 6:30 plane last night to San Francisco, and was home in Berkeley, Calif., in time for a late supper. His feet were tender and his sides ached a bit. But he woke up this morning feeling far less stiff than he had expected, and he went out on the tennis courts to practice his strokes. Because tennis is still his business, his only business, "I enjoy running," he said. "But I'd rather get paid for my tennis, than not get paid for my running. Amateur athletes don't get paid, you know. The only thing I got was a promise from [television commentator] Bud Collins that he'd give me 28 cents a mile and a can of beans."

McManus ran his first Boston Marathon yesterday, the second marathon he had ever run. And he ran well, finishing in 2 hours 55 minutes 16 seconds. Never mind that he placed 308th. He was only 35 minutes behind the winner, Jack Fultz, and he finished ahead of almost 1,600 other runners who started the race.

It was a noteworthy achievement considering that McManus is a rank amateur as a marathoner. He has no coach, follows no training regimen and learns what he knows about long-distance running from reading Runner's World magazine.

"It was a great experience for me," said McManus, who is active as a tournament player and an officer in the Association of Tennis Professionals. "Boston has the name and the prestige. I'd like to come back. My God, it was a lot of fun, having all the people cheering for me when they didn't even know who I was. But I'd never take it so seriously. I could never win this. Just the same, it was a thrill."

McManus was invited to run at Boston—although his best time of 3:06 did not qualify him to compete—by race official Jack Semple. Semple was the masseur for the tennis pros whenever the two circuits stopped in Boston, and over the years Semple had always pumped up the Boston Marathon to McManus.

McManus applied for and received an Amateur Athletic Union card, allowing him to compete as an amateur runner. And on Saturday, after packing a pair of gloves that he would not use in the blistering heat, he flew to Boston. The day before, as a training session, he ran 20 miles.

"Pretty damn nice, huh?" McManus said.

And yesterday morning after setting no breakfast because he did not know the proper breakfast to eat, McManus picked up his official race number. It was B-2.

"The 'B' is ridiculous," he said.

But less than three hours later, after covering more than 26 miles and being cheered by more than 100,000 people along the way, he was smiling and exhilarated. And now the "B" stood for "ready." Ready to come back and do it again.

So. Africa Tennis Ban Is Pushed

MEXICO CITY, April 20 (Reuters)—At least 10 countries will join Mexico in withdrawing from the Davis Cup unless South Africa is expelled, the Mexican Tennis Federation said today.

"Miguel Ojeda," federation president, said he had received confirmation from the countries, including the Soviet Union and several in Eastern Europe, that they would follow Mexico's withdrawal.

South Africa's presence in the competition is to be discussed at the annual meeting of the Davis Cup Nations in London in July. The meeting will also consider a recommendation from the Davis Cup management committee that Mexico be expelled for having refused to play South Africa this year.

The federation said it had based its decision not to play South Africa on instructions from the Mexican Government, in line with a United Nations resolution calling for the end of all sports ties with South Africa in protest against apartheid.

Clay-Court Tourney Adds a Golden Touch

By CHARLES FRIEDMAN
With the outdoor season under way, there are changes on the tournament scene.

For the first time in its long history the New York State men's clay-court championships will offer prize money. It is one of the most popular tournaments in the East, drawing about 200 players each year at the North Shore Tennis and Racquets Club in Bayside, Queens, where Bill Tilden, Winnie Richards, Frank Hunter and other old-time stars used to compete.

Larry Rosenthal, tournament chairman, says entries for singles and doubles close on May 22 and play begins June 4. Last year, straight time. And in an effort to involve more women in tournaments, it is setting up a series of round-robin doubles Tuesdays and Thursdays from 10 A.M. to noon for beginners and experienced players, starting May 4, open to anyone.

Meanwhile, the Concord Hotel at Kiamasha Lake, N.Y., which had been host to the Stevens Cup, has become part of the American Express Card Challengers Circuit, a new prize-money tour with a total of six tournaments in July and August.

By Zauser of the Port Washington (L.I.) Country Academy is chairman of the circuit's Eastern Division.

2 at the Roosevelt Field T.C. in Garden City. L.I. Men's entries close on Friday and women's April 29.

Steve Siegel, who has been playing in Spain, will be on the seeded list. The Westchester opens May 8.

While many sardines or "bubbles" for indoor play are being taken down and stored, a battle has broken out over an attempt by a private operator to lease the Kissena Park courts for a bubble next winter. And the hard-pressed Parks Department is in no man's land. It wants to get the income from the lease, but would rather not arouse the ire of residents in the area in Flushing, Queens.

Smaller situations have arisen elsewhere where bubbles have gone up o park courts. The main objections are that the bubbles spoil the beauty of the parks, cut into the playing season for those who purchase permits from the department and create traffic and pollution problems. Community Board 7 is meeting Monday to vote on the Kissena matter.

In Cunningham Park, also in Queens, the bubble operator has stirred up much anger by refusing to remove his clubhouse after the indoor season. It is considered an eyesore by the residents. The department has promised to look into the issue.

It should be mentioned that thousands of persons who otherwise would keep their racquets in closets during the winter make use of the bubbles.

On Nearby Courts
Butch Seewagen, the Columbia coach, grew up on the North Shore's courts, took the singles title for the fourth time by beating Herb FitzGibbon.

But while this tournament has gained in stature, another, equally popular one has been lost. Players and fans were unhappy to learn that the national clay championships for men 35 years and over will not be held at the Shelter Rock Club in Manhasset, L.I.

After many years there, during which the event became established as a season highlight, it has now been moved to Austin, Tex. One reason was that out-of-state players had complained that delays in scheduling matches had made the tournament too expensive and inconvenient.

Another "first" is the switch of the Stevens Cup international senior team matches to Fred Botur's Tennisport in Queens in August. The United States has dominated the series, in which the best men players 45 years and older compete.

Tennisport is also holding the Eastern senior championships in July for the second

Pele's Leg in Cast With Minor Sprain

By ALEX YANNIS
Pele, the Cosmos' star, will have his left foot in a soft cast for several days after tests on Monday disclosed that he had sprained the foot during the game against the Toros on Sunday in Miami. Pele was limping slightly on Sunday night and the limp was more noticeable after arriving at LaGuardia Airport Monday. Pele told a concerned teammate "it's nothing, it will be O.K."

Coast has brought about the formation of the Pacific Conference of The Super 10. Coaches from northern and southern California have formed the conference to provide competition among colleges in that area. This should set the pattern for other regions to form conferences.

The members of the Pacific Conference are the University of California, Los Angeles, San Diego State, Southern California, Fullerton State, Stanford, Berkeley, San Jose State, San Francisco and Santa Barbara.

With Keith Eddy's right arm wrapped round Pele's shoulders, the Brazilian assured Eddy that it was nothing serious. "No problem, no problem," Pele kept telling Eddy, the Cosmos' captain who had dominated the middle of the defense in the 1-0 victory over the Toros.

Dr. Jeff Minkoff, the team doctor, examined Pele on Monday and found the slight sprain. He ordered Pele to immobilize the foot for several days.

Eddy will leave for England tonight to bring his family to the United States. He will miss practice for the rest of the week and so will Pele. Ken Furphy, the Cosmos' coach, is also leaving for England tonight. Furphy and Eddy will return to New York on Sunday night to prepare for the Cosmos' home opener on May 2 against Chicago.

Cosmo officials said yesterday that Pele would use crutches in order not to tire the leg.

Pain could be seen on Pele's face on the plane ride to New York from Miami. He said he was very unhappy with his performance and that the field was not to his liking. Sand got into his eyes several times and at one point the game was momentarily held up. The most damage the sand caused Pele, however, was when he missed a kick and his toe hit the ground.

Fortunately for the Cosmos, the game against Boston on Saturday night has been postponed because the Minute-men have yet to agree on a contract with Schaefer Stadium in Foxboro, Mass. Pele can use the time to recover and be ready for the Chicago Sting at Yankee Stadium on May 2.

COME TO JAMAICA AS MORE THAN A TOURIST.

How'd you like to spend your next Caribbean vacation "visiting friends"? That's just what you will be doing when you come to Jamaica—especially if you're carrying your new Friend of Jamaica card.

It's your personal way of saying "I'm a friend of Jamaica." And our island's brand-spanking new way of being neighborly. Here's how it works.

You've got your card, it's free (your travel agent will help you get one) and you come to Jamaica. From now on, no matter which of our four resort areas you visit, you're a Very Important Visitor.

Everyone likes to make friends. Flash your card, and a smile. You'll find you've opened the door to Jamaican hospitality. You might even find yourself getting a surprise gift, a free drink or the kind of special attention friends deserve. Pick up the phone or drop by the Hospitality Desk at any Tourist Board office. You'll find out what's going on and where. And they'll go out of their way to be helpful any way they can.

But listen to this. Every time you show your card at a cooperating hotel, tour operator, car rental agency, or at Trans-Jamaica Airlines, you have a chance to win a free seven-day, six-night return vacation for two (including breakfasts and dinners)! There'll be 10 "Take Me Back To Jamaica" prizes awarded to our Friends every month. (A booklet listing all participants is available at Jamaica Tourist Board Airport Centers, hotels, U-Drive and tour desks.)

And, as a Friend of Jamaica, you'll be getting our special Newsletter, crammed with juicy Jamaica tidbits and the inside scoop on bargains, package tours, etc. (Be prepared, we'll make you want to come back!)

State Racing Board Head Declares Charges 'Phony'

By STEVE CADY

Governor Carey's advisers are misquoting him with "viciously phony" information about New York racing, the chairman of the State Racing and Wagering Board charged yesterday.

The Governor has been grossly misled, said Bertram D. Sarafan, "I can't believe while he and others continue to attack the integrity and competence of the board."

In recent weeks Sarafan's agency has been sharply criticized by two state investigative groups for allegedly failing to monitor the financial dealings of Roosevelt and Yonkers Raceways. The clubs have been accused of camouflaging their true condition by permitting themselves to be "financially drained" by parent corporations.

Separate reports by the State Commission of Investigation and the Office of Legislative Oversight and Review have questioned whether New York is getting its fair share of pari-mutuel tax revenue from Roosevelt and Yonkers. As his board issued its annual report for 1975, Sarafan said the revenue figures spoke for themselves.

They showed that New York State received a record sum of $183.4 million in pari-mutuel tax revenue from racing in 1975. Off-track revenue totaling $64 million for New York City and $9 million for other localities lifted the overall revenue for government to $256 million.

"All this talk about the state getting shortchanged is nonsense," said Sarafan. "New York squeezes racing harder than any other state. We take out three times as much tax revenue as the next biggest producer, California."

According to Sarafan, government's takeout from racing averages 7.5 percent of the betting handle nationally. In thoroughbred racing was 9.4, for harness racing 9.8 and for Roosevelt and Yonkers, the two tracks accused of shortchanging the state, 11.

Of the $85.2 million in on-track taxes produced for New York State by its

SPECIAL TO THE NEW YORK TIMES

BUFFALO, April 20—Bert Marshall, an Islander defenseman, scored his first goal of the season with 18 seconds remaining tonight to give New York a 4-3 victory over the Buffalo Sabres. The goal came on a shot from just inside the blue line and enabled the Islanders to gain a 3-2 lead in their four-of-seven-games Stanley Cup quarterfinal series.

The next game will be played Thursday at Nassau Coliseum. Should a seventh game prove necessary, it will be held here on Sunday.

Islanders Catch Up

Buffalo had taken a two-goal lead on its second and third shots of the game but Andre St. Laurent finished off a nice goalmouth pass by Gerry Desjardins and J. F. Parise scored during a two-man Islander advantage to even the score at 2-2 later in the first period.

From that point the game became a rough, physical contest filled with hard hits, both legitimate and illegal.

The first altercation came at 18:20 of the first period. Dave Lewis, an Islander defenseman, had slammed Craig Ramsay into the boards behind the Islander net and Ramsay lay on the ice. Danny Gare moved in to push Lewis and then Lee Fogolin rushed in, and both Sabres punched away at Lewis. Then Fogolin jumped on Lewis and the two players were entangled at the back of the net.

Lewis and Fogolin received five-minute penalties for fighting and 10-minute misconducts for prolonging the grappling. In addition, Lewis received a gross misconduct for hair pulling. Referee Andy Van Hellemond awarded

Jim Schoenfeld, the Sabres' captain and best defenseman, left the ice late in the opening period. He complained of pain in his left ankle, which has been bothering him since the final game of the regular season.

McIntosh, Howatt in Fight

Schoenfeld's replacement from the thin Buffalo defensive corps was Paul McIntosh. The rookie soon found himself embroiled in a fight with Howatt after elbowing the Islander left wing.

Bill Smith brought a degree of physical play to his tending of the Islander net in the first period when he went 30 feet out of the net to fell Rene Robert. The crowd screamed as Robert's weak shot slid just wide of the net.

Rick Martin had opened the Buffalo scoring. Billy Harris, Clark Gillies and Bryan Trotter had just caused a lot of commotion around Gerry Desjardins in the Buffalo goal, and Gillies and Trotter were caught in the corner. The puck squirted out to Martin. Harris's stick check at midice was ineffective and Martin passed to Gil Perreault. A stiff check by Denis Potvin dislodged Perreault from the puck but Martin picked it up again and beat Smith on the glove side.

Gare scored Buffalo's second goal as he and Jean Potvin tried to catch a pass from Don Luce in midflight. Their sticks met and Potvin's actually directed the puck past Smith.

St. Laurent's goal made it 2-1 and then the Islanders got a break-at 1:36 of a two-man advantage — and tied the score. Parise swatted in his second rebound after Denis Potvin had worked the puck into the goal area.

Buffalo broke the tie with less than 10 minutes remaining. A loose puck came to Jim Loreutz and Bill Smith knelt as he tried to sweep the disk away. But he pushed the puck into his right thigh and it slithered in.

The game became bruising and frantic in the final minutes. Denis Potvin and the Islanders' two clutch players acquired last season from the Minnesota North Stars, Parise and Jude Drouin, combined to knot the score at 3-3. Potvin slapped a pass from Drouin into the right side of the Buffalo net.

Campbell Scores Ontario Changes

MONTREAL, April 20 (AP)—Clarence Campbell, president of the National Hockey League, said today he found it odd that Roy McMurtry, Ontario's Attorney General, saw fit to issue charges against only Philadelphia Flyers after last Thursday's brawl-filled playoff game in Toronto.

"After all, Toronto set the standard of conduct for the game, bringing that Kurt Walker up," Campbell said. "Before the game was a couple of minutes old, Walker went out of his way to cross-check [Dave] Schultz. So Toronto's intentions of how they were going to play were quite obvious."

Three members of the Flyers were charged after the game, in which Dave Newell, the referee, assessed 173 minutes in penalties. Campbell said the films he saw of Thursday night's game did not support McMurtry's drastic action.

Yanks Top White Sox, 5-4, As Shirt Dispute Flares

By WILLIAM N. WALLACE

It was merely the eighth of 162 games the Yankees will play this season, but Tippy Martinez will remember it.

His five innings of runless relief pitching at the Stadium yesterday helped the home team's 5-4 victory over the Chicago White Sox. It was the sixth triumph of the campaign for first-place New York.

Otherwise the contest will be remembered as the start of the blouse controversy, featuring Billy Martin and George Steinbrenner 3d of the Yankees versus Paul Richards, Bill Veck, Mary Frances Veck et al of Chicago.

He protested if another White Sox pitcher came out of the bull pen with white undershirt sleeves, which he contended helped to disguise where the baseball was coming from.

The complaint about the undershirt brought a result. Clay Carroll changed from white to black. But the Yankees still could not hit the 34-year reliever who replaced Bart Johnson after they had scored all five runs in the second and third innings.

The Vecks were not on hand to take a position in the controversy, although Richards spoke for the club when he said, "They stay out." He meant the shirttails remain tucked.

Martin's point is that a loose shirt can be pulled out into the strike zone and then be hit by a pitch, which would entitle a batter to first base. He used to do that when he played for the Yankees. "It's cheating," he said.

That Steinbrenner would threaten to protest a game to Lee MacPhail, president of the American League, did not sit well with the 67-year-

Mostly About Home Run Hitters

Mike Schmidt hit four consecutive home runs the Phillies win a pitcher's battle with the other day, 18-16 in 10 innings, the papers dutifully reported. Only nine other batters had ever hit four home runs in one game, only three of them on consecutive times at bat; only two besides had four homers in an extra-inning game. One of them was Chuck Klein, of sainted memory in Philadelphia because he had two comings. In the fall of 1933 after Chuck had batted 368 for the Phillies, Gerry Nugent sold him to the Cubs for $85,000—a gang of money then—plus Mark Koenig, the old Yankee shortstop; Ted Kleinhaus, a pitcher, and Gink Hendricks, an outfielder who had once hit .354 for the Yankees and was famous in literary circles for the immoderate cry: "From now on it's every man for himself." Two seasons later the Cubs paid Nugent to take Klein back along with Fabian Kowalik, in exchange for Curt Davis, pitcher, and Ethan Aldridge.

Long after Chuck's second coming, on July 10, hit a line drive on his first time at bat that Paul caught against the wall in Pittsburgh's Forbes most 400 feet from the plate. He then hit four more, surprising neither his teammates nor his at all. The fans were the surprise. The Philadelphia papers stood at attention in type: "Klein hits 2 as Phils Bow." Stories about Schmidt's big day mentioned that he had hit four consecutive home runs against Koenig in Philadelphia but did not go into details.

It is remembered that throughout his first 10 home runs, Gehrig was always in the shadow.

Ruth. Only once in their years together did Lou lead to beat Ruth for the team home-run champion. Late in the 1931 season, Lou hit into the bleachers at Stadium in Washington with two out and on second base.

Babe Ruth had never hit four home runs in a game, and Ruth was the biggest name in baseball—with the possible exception of John J. McGraw. The day Gehrig hit four in Philadelphia, it rained in New York. Tom Meany, covering the Giants for the World-Telegram, dropped into the Polo Grounds and found a notice on the clubhouse wall: McGraw had resigned and Bill Terry was the new manager. Once again, Gehrig got second billing in the headlines.

Mention of McGraw recalls a letter from John McCormack of Dallas, who wonders how McGraw's Giants managed to lose the 1927 pennant. He points out that three-fourths of the infield—Bill Terry, Rogers Hornsby and Fred Lindstrom—are in the Hall of Fame and perhaps the fourth member, Travis Jackson, ought to be. Two outfielders on that club—Edd Roush and Mel Ott—also made it to Cooperstown, but in 1927 Ott was an 18-year-old who played little. Burtleigh Grimes, a 19-game winner that year, was the team's sixth certified immortal.

"So," Mr. McCormack asks, "What happened on the way to the pennant?"

Trials of Mr. McGraw

The answer is that after winning their fourth straight championship in 1924, the Giants began to wear out. The 1926 infield was great—George Kelly, Frank Frisch, Jackson and Lindstrom, with young Terry filling in at first and in the outfield. However, Ross Youngs, the peerless outfielder, came down with Bright's disease; Art Nehf had neuritis and couldn't pitch; Heinie Groh was finished. As the club floundered, McGraw raged at Frisch, the captain, until Frank could take no more. In St. Louis, he jumped the team and went home. The Giants finished fifth; as Hornsby led the Cardinals to the World Championship.

That was 1926. By 1927 Terry was the regular at first base, Jackson and Lindstrom were at the top of their game, and what may have been the most sensational trade ever made had brought Hornsby East in exchange for Frisch. Hornsby played second base, was the team captain and when McGraw was ill or absent for other reasons, he managed the club.

For the first time in his life, McGraw was absent a good deal. He was in a three-sided quarrel with Charles Stoneham and Francis X. McQuade, the owners. He was plagued by a sinus condition, Grimes and Fred Fitzsimmons were his only reliable pitchers and only Edd Roush kept the outfield off the burlesque circuit. As acting manager on the last Western trip, Hornsby got the Giants up to challenge Pittsburgh, but they hung in the stretch and finished third.

"The 1927 Pirates weren't memorable," writes Mr. McCormack, "except, maybe, for being the first team to lose four straight to the Yankees."

Mets, Behind Matlack, Brush Back Cardinals, 8-0

By PARTON KEESE

SPECIAL TO THE NEW YORK TIMES

ST. LOUIS, April 20—Apparently frustrated by their 17-inning loss to the New York Mets early this morning, and aggravated by three Met home runs in the first two innings tonight, the St. Louis Cardinals started plunking their opponents with fastballs.

Though the teams came to blows over the beanballs, Jon Matlack weathered the battle and hurled the Mets to an 8-9 victory, their second in a row over the dispirited Cards.

Lynn McGlothen, who by hitting Matlack and Del Unser with pitches, was ejected in the fourth inning after both dugouts emptied and clashed on the infield.

For the benefit of those fans who went to bed before Del Unser hit his 17th-inning game-winning homer at about 12:30 this morning, the Mets' center fielder repeated the chore at 7:45 tonight in the first inning. Unser walloped the ball to virtually the identical spot in the right-field stands for his second home run of the season and his sixth against the Cardinals in a little over a year.

Unser's homer, with Ed Kranepool on second base after a double, a two-run homer by Felix Milan, with Wayne Barrett on first. Before the Cards came to bat, the Mets were ahead, 4-0.

It didn't seem to be McGlothen's night. He struck out Dave Kingman not a rare feat, then needed two splendid fielding plays for the other two out in the first inning.

A bit of bad luck and another home run by John Miller on a three-ball, no-strike count with Matlack on base via Vic Harris's error at second brought 2 unearned runs home and gave the explosive Mets, a 6-0 lead.

For the short-stroking Milan, who has hit only 20 homers in 1,251 games, it was his four-base blow that put the Met home-run streak at nine straight games, just one from their club record.

Too Close For Comfort

When Unser came up in the second, McGlothen hit him with a pitch. An inning later, a near-riot erupted both dugouts with several fights ensuing.

Matlack threw close to McGlothen when the Cardinal batted in the bottom of the third. Bruce Froemming, the plate umpire, immediately warned Matlack and spoke to both managers. This amounted to an automatic $50 fine for Matlack and automatic ejection from the game for another warning.

After one more pitch, a strike, someone in the Met dugout began razzing Froemming, who immediately ordered the culprit to leave the grounds. It turned out to be Bud Harrelson, a nonstarter tonight, who raced out and argued nose to nose with the umpire before leaving.

When Matlack led off the Met fourth, McGlothen threw the first pitch behind him, causing the umpire to officiously warn him also and bringing out Manager Joe Frazier from the Met dugout, who complained the Card pitcher should be thrown out.

He lost that argument, but he didn't have to wait long for McGlothen's ejection, which came two pitches later when he plunked Matlack in the back. The Cardinal pitcher, knowing he would be thrown out, started to walk off, but Dave Kingman came trying out of the dugout to get at McGlothen. Though blocked by another player, he was followed by all the rest of the Mets, as well as all of the Cardinals, the armies clashing violently near the pitcher's mound.

Several players on both sides pushed, shoved and threw punches, but order pre-

Players from Mets' and Cardinals' dugouts converging in fourth-inning melee. Cardinals' starter, Lynn McGlothen, hit Del Unser on the shoulder with a pitch in the third inning. McGlothen was narrowly missed by a Jon Matlack pitch in the bottom of the third who in turn was hit by McGlothen in the top of the fourth. McGlothen was then ejected.

He was also counsel for the State Horse Racing Commission from 1959 to 1972.

The lure of horse racing's 1,623 programs in 1975 (21 more in 1974) resulted in a record $183,497,845 in racing revenue to the state. That total included the state's share from off-track betting, chiefly in the City of New York.

Board was created by then Gov. Nelson Rockefeller in July 1973. Sarafan served as its temporary chairman until the appointment of Emil (Bus) Mosbacher, the following April. Sarafan was named by the new Governor, Malcolm Wilson, to succeed Mosbacher. His term runs to February, 1980.

Schmidt Connects, Ties Another Mark

By AL HARVIN

"I didn't even know they kept records for that," said Mike Schmidt, when told yesterday that his sixth home run in three games had earned him another line in baseball's annals. It also helped the Philadelphia Phillies defeat the Pirates, 5-1, in Pittsburgh.

Schmidt tied one record on Saturday in Chicago with four successive home runs and tied another one on Sunday with his fifth in two games. Then he matched a record held by five other players with his clout off John Candelaria yesterday. It came on the first pitch in the fourth inning and gave the Phils a 2-0 lead.

The five others who hit six home runs in three games were Tony Lazzeri of the Yankees in 1936; Ralph Kiner of the Pirates, twice in 1947; Gus Zernial of the Philadelphia A's in 1951; Frank Thomas of the Mets in 1962, and Lee May of the Cincinnati Reds in 1969. Schmidt would need two today to match the four-game record of eight set by Kiner in 1947 with Pittsburgh.

"The records don't faze me in the least," said Schmidt, who has seven homers for the season. "I'm just trying to swing the bat and make contact. I'd rather have a couple of line-drive singles any day than another home run tomorrow."

His slugging overshadowed Jim Kaat's six-hitter. The left-handed pitcher also drove in two runs with a double in the sixth as he picked up his first victory in the National League.

"That's the first hit I've had in three weeks," said Kaat, who spent that period with the designated-hitter rule in the American League.

One of the fastest working pitchers, he helped to complete the game in 1 hour 47 minutes, holding the Pirates to three singles and giving no walks for seven innings. The Pirates finally broke through in the eighth on a double by a pinch-hitter, Duffy Dyer.

Horton eads dh's Again

Willie Horton, the Detroit Tigers' designated hitter who led the American League's dh batters in 1975, is in front again. Through Monday's games, Horton batted .333 with eight hits in 24 times at bat and had one home run and five runs batted in.

Chief of S.E.C. Asks Rules Requiring More Scrutiny for Listed Companies

By ROBERT D. HERSHEY JR. Special to The New York Times WASHINGTON, April 20— The Securities and Exchange Commission is urging the New York Stock Exchange to adopt rules requiring companies to submit to greater supervision by independent directors...

Roderick M. Hills, the S.E.C. chairman, told a public citizens' forum sponsored by Ralph Nader today that he considered it "quite probable" the exchange would take such action.

Among other solutions proposed have been broad criminal laws, public participation such as that found in European companies or Federal chartering for multinational corporations.

The question as I see it is whether the efficacy of our system of self-regulation can survive, Mr. Hills declared.

Some Find Keynes Policies Outmoded

By LEONARD SILK

Following the first quarter's strong gain, with the real gross national product rising at an annual rate of 7.5 percent, the United States economy has just about made it up the other side of the valley into which it began sliding during the fourth quarter of 1973.

slump began, were correspondingly greater. But Germany and Japan, like the United States, are now clearly on the mend.

omists in this country still expect prices to rise this year at somewhere between a 5 1/2 percent and a 6 percent annual rate. The relative optimists believe the rate might get down as low as 5 percent.

Wriston Cites Gains Abroad, U.S. Drop

By STEVEN RATTNER Citicorp officials told shareholders at the company's annual meeting yesterday that operating earnings rose by 8 percent during the first quarter to $90.8 million from $84.3 million a year earlier.

For the rest, which have reported declines up to 57 percent, the myriad problems—largely brought on by the recession—have included record loan losses, increased operating costs other than interest expense, and a narrowing of the spread between the cost of borrowing money and the income from lending it.

As for Citicorp, chairman Walter B. Wriston told the 350 stockholders and outlookers that "the most significant factor in our earnings increase was our international business, where a combination of improved volume and higher spreads more than offset a decline in the profitability of our activities in the United States."

Rockefeller Asserts Banking Is Strong

Speaking at the Chase annual meeting, Mr. Rockefeller said recent criticism in the press and from some members of Congress "could eventually have a serious impact on Chase and on the entire banking system."

The Chase chairman said certain unnamed members of Congress "seem to be attempting to use the banks as a scapegoat for many of the nation's economic difficulties."

Increased Economic Activity and Declining Inflation Ignite the Advance

6-WEEK PEAK REACHED

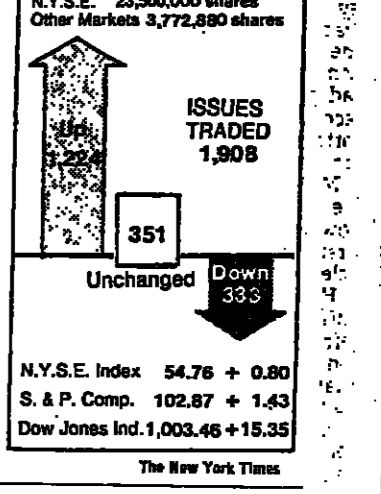

Gainers Top Losing Issues by Ratio of Nearly 4 to 1—Volume Is Up Sharply

By VERTANIG G. VARTAN

The combination of rising economic activity and a declining inflation rate ignited a dynamic rally in the stock market yesterday and sent the Dow Jones industrial average hurtling above the 1,000 barrier with a gain of more than 15 points.

Once again, Wall Street provided the sort of sudden change in sentiment that makes the stock market unpredictable and exciting. On Monday, one broker had described market action as "just plain boring."

scored its best advance in six weeks and once again came within striking distance of its 38-month high.

It marked the fourth time since March 11 that the Dow has crossed above 1,000. Repeated surges of profit taking, along with nervousness bred by the rapid rise of stock prices since December, in the past soon sent the average back below 1,000.

On March 24, the average closed at 1,009.21 to establish a 38-month high, powered by such "Smokestack America" issues as U. S. Steel, International Paper and du Pont. The record closing high of 1,051.70 was set on Jan. 11, 1973.

The key to the market's future assault on these targets, many analysts believe, is the action of basic-industry stocks that lately have retraced some of their gains in a process of price consolidation.

If any one stock set the

Institution-Sized Discounts For Individual Investors

Institutions are now getting great commission discounts from your broker. If you're not getting them too, there is something you can do about it. Do business at Source.

All we require is two things. You pick your own stocks and eventually do at least $250 worth of commission business with us. If you can do that, you'll get institution-sized discounts of 30% to 75% off from previous fixed rates on your stock commissions and up to 35% off from previous CBOE rates on your option commissions.

You will get institutional quality service from us, too. Our full account services include cash, margin, option, short and C.O.D. accounts with each account insured for up to $300,000.

Plus, you will get a service even institutions don't get from your broker — a choice of either Third Market or Stock Exchange executions with Third Market executions confirmed immediately while you are on the telephone.

Most Mutual Funds Trail Inflation

By ROBERT MEIZ

A tabulation of the performance of leading mutual funds over the most recent double-market cycle clearly indicates that the funds and stocks generally have not kept pace with inflation. A market cycle is the span of time over which the stock market, as measured by a representative market average, moves from a peak to a trough and back to a peak again.

When this process continues through another trough to a second peak, a double market cycle has occurred. Computer Directions Advisors of Silver Spring, Md., was asked to chart the performance of the 285 mutual funds which it has data for since 1953.

The $1.4-billion, Affiliated Growth and Income Fund was up 39.8 percent, and the Investment Company of America Growth and Income Fund was up 30.1 percent. Only 69 of the 285 funds monitored by Computer Directions were able to match or outdo the Standard & Poor's index.

Investors who have been in mutual funds for the full double-cycle are bound to be disappointed that their funds have not kept pace with inflation, even though they have experienced risks along the way. But that goes for investors generally, since the S.&P. index is representative of what stocks have done overall.

The following table shows the performance of the best funds over the double-cycle period—regardless of size or objective:

Table with columns: Assets (millions), Fund Objective, Gain (12/31/76), Gain (12/31/53). Lists top performing funds like Templeton's growth, International Inv. Bond, Investors Selective Bond, etc.

It's nice going to work knowing that yesterday's payments will automatically be on your books today.

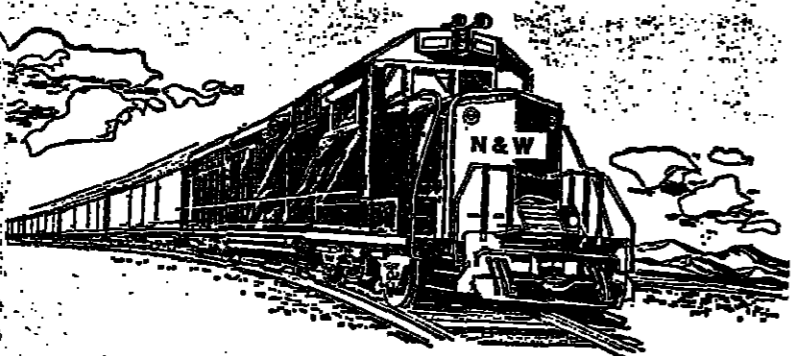

In-the-know comptrollers and credit managers are finding that trips to work can be a lot more pleasant these days... thanks to a new service called National Check Transmission. In essence, National Check Transmission (NCT) is a computerized way of linking your company with all its regional lock-box banks throughout the country. Our Computer Center collects customer remittance information from your banks... guarantees confidentiality... edits the input... consolidates it... and then sends you a single transmission that's customized to your specifications. You receive it in the exact format needed for direct entry to your accounts receivable and credit management system. NCT dramatically bridges the gap between billing and posting, with 24-hour reporting on all payments received in a company's lock-box banks. And being able to post at that speed is doubly welcome in these days of tight money. Besides speeding up cash application, allowing approval of new orders, NCT also saves by reducing your clerical workload. To find out more about this time-cutting, cost-cutting service, give Roy Kelley a call... at (617) 434-3870. In New York call 0X5-2370, Ext. 3870.

Economic Analysis: Some Find Keynesian Policies Outmoded

peters out in late 1977 or 1978 —largely because tight monetary and fiscal policies required to combat resurgent inflation might bring it to an end—upswing in unemployment would lift the jobless rate back above 8 percent, or perhaps 9 percent, before the end of this decade.

Answers Sought Despite reason for great satisfaction that the 1973-75 slump did not degenerate into anything worse, there is a growing concern among economists that they do not have the answers for dealing with the problems ushered in by the 1970's. The economic policies that became familiar under the name "Keynesian," named for John Maynard Keynes of Britain, now appear either inadequate or obsolete to a growing number of economists.

They contend that the Keynesian doctrines were essentially designed to deal with the problems of the Depression when deep unemployment was combined with deflation, rather than (as now) with inflation. Neil J. McMullen, an international economist with the National Planning Association in Washington, maintains that it is now crucial for economists to create new solutions to the new problems of the Western world.

He considers that the basic Keynesian doctrine of "demand management" is no longer satisfactory for dealing with stagflation. The Keynesian formula called for increasing total demand for goods and services when there was high unemployment and for cutting total demand when there was inflation. These increases or decreases in total demand could be affected by changing the level of government spending or the rate of taxation, together with changes in the degree of monetary stimulus or restraint provided by the monetary authorities.

The new conditions of the 1970's, according to Mr. McMullen, call for greater focus on the supply side—to increase the availability of resources and the factors of production. However, neither he nor most other economists believe that this calls for abandoning efforts to control total demand. What they are looking for is a way to operate on both sides of the aggregate supply-demand equation.

Focus of Policy According to this view, economic policy should focus on structural economic problems, such as programs to improve labor skills and to increase investment, particularly in research and development and in production of raw materials. The policy also calls for providing better incentives for productive economic activity.

"The purely Keynesian era is over," says Mr. McMullen. "The obstacle to economic progress is no longer secular stagnation but supply constraints to full employment and growth. What is needed may amount to a revolution in economics but is certainly an evolution in economic thinking—that is, the development of macroeconomic policy beyond demand management toward the augmentation of supplies and the enhancement of incentives."

There has been evidence of widespread antipathy among the politicians toward the economists. This has been by no means confined to the United States. Last week in Britain (the cradle of classical and neoclassical economics running from Adam Smith through Lord Keynes) the New Statesman awarded a prize for the following definition of "economist": "An inhabitant of cloud-cuckoo land; one knowledgeable in an obsolete art; a harmless academic drudge whose theories and laws are but mere puffs of air in face of that anarchy of banditry, greed and corruption which holds sway in the pecuniary affairs of the real world."

Future Progress Robert J. Gordon of Northwestern University has reached the same conclusion. "A good argument can be made that the day of stabilization policy is past," says Professor Gordon, "and that the real progress in the next 10 to 20 years will be in the area of dealing with the allocation of resources and the distribution of wealth and income."

In Professor Gordon's view, economic policy in the future will have to devote greater attention to the role of unemployment compensation and Social Security, overcoming capital shortages, reducing the costs of pollution, determining the appropriate size of the governmental sector, deciding on government programs for creating specific types of "human capital" through manpower training and through cooperative programs with private industry, methods of replacing existing welfare and food stamp programs and the like.

Although the 1976 election campaign in the United States has been notably weak in the exploration of economic issues, the politicians have shown a measure of sensitivity to these new economic concerns. This had led them, by and large, to ignore the advice of the economists, most of whom are still focused on the manipulation of demand.

able in an obsolete art; a harmless academic drudge whose theories and laws are but mere puffs of air in face of that anarchy of banditry, greed and corruption which holds sway in the pecuniary affairs of the real world."

Redeeming their reputation throughout the industrial world in the years immediately ahead will require economists to move on beyond the economics of Smith and Keynes.

Continued From Page 49 tone to yesterday's market surge, it was Polaroid, exploding with a gain of 4 1/2 points and finishing at 37 1/2, as the most active issue on the New York Stock Exchange.

It was a dramatic turnabout for Polaroid, which traded last week below 32 and seemed scarcely to have a friend on the Wall Street. Depressing the stock was the expectation surrounding the introduction of a competitive instant-camera system by Eastman Kodak. Yesterday's unveiling of its new instant-camera products by Kodak served simultaneously to lift the pressure off Polaroid and to depress the price of Kodak's stock—it fell 1 1/2 to 113 1/2—after its recent strength. Volume rose substantially to 23.5 million shares from 16.5 million shares on Monday.

I.T.T. PAID $300,000 TO ITALY'S TAX AIDES

Subsidiaries of the International Telephone and Telegraph Corporation paid about $300,000 to Italian tax agents to "facilitate" negotiations over the taxes owed between 1969 and 1972, according to memorandums from company auditors.

Copies of these memorandums were included in documents filed yesterday in the Federal District Court in Washington by the Securities and Exchange Commission. The S.E.C. went to court in an effort to compel I.T.T. to cooperate with an investigation into questionable foreign and domestic payoffs by the company.

An I.T.T. spokesman said last night, "We cannot comment on this because we are in litigation." Last month, the company disclosed that $3.8 million was paid over the last five years and ultimately received by employees or persons closely related to foreign customers.

If you still want a bank to manage your payroll, come to Chemical.

Chemical Bank has the largest bank-run payroll management system in New York. Which figures, because a major bank should know more about handling and transferring money than anyone else. So if you want a bank to handle your payroll management, get in touch with Chemical. We believe we can do a more efficient job than any outside payroll service. Or for that matter, any other bank. You'll find we're faster and more flexible because we're more responsive to your needs.

And we'll keep on doing the job. Even though some banks have been dropping out of the payroll management business, we're proud of being the biggest and we intend staying the biggest. We'll be glad to answer your questions and we'll show you how Chemical's Payroll Management System is better for your company. Call Ken LaMotte at (212) 952-2711.

Report from Number One Wall Street

Jean deRochefort, Vice President International Correspondent Banking Division

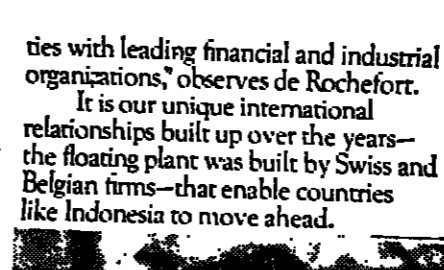

Floating a fertilizer plant for Indonesia.

Jean deRochefort, who supervises Irving's correspondent banking operations in Asia and the Middle East, has built up relationships with many developing countries. And he's anxious to enable them to expand their economies with investment ties that can originate with any company or country ready to do business.

Take Indonesia, which is currently dependent on costly imported urea. The Irving participated in a worldwide syndicate to bring a shipborne fertilizer plant there to shore up Indonesia's ability to meet its own fertilizer needs and even enable the country to export a little ammonia. It should bring Indonesia an annual foreign exchange benefit of $600 million.

The floating plant has mobile efficiency. Its raw material is natural gas now being flared or wasted at offshore rigs. When the gas at one site is gone, the ship moves on to another of the country's ample offshore sources.

The Irving's relationships with Indonesia go back to pre-World War II days, and today we work closely with the central bank and all five of the state commercial banks, and we have many close

Suzanne Zorgo, Federal Funds Broker and Money Market Division

Wednesdays are chaotic.

Every day, Suzanne Zorgo brokers hundreds of millions in overnight Federal Funds. It's a demanding job that requires a headset instead of a regular telephone. But no day is ever as busy as Wednesday—settlement day.

From all over the country, money desks call her to buy or sell, or just to get a feel of the market. "It's a demanding and sensitive job," says Suzanne, "because you're constantly talking to professionals who know how to make their bank's money work. You have to build and gain their confidence by the way you conduct the market."

And Suzanne does. Her desk, which is part of the Irving's Bond and Money Market Division, makes the Irving the only bank in the U.S. that brokers Federal Funds. Which keeps Ms. Zorgo on the telephone for most of the day. Particularly on Wednesdays.

T. Carter Hagan, Vice President Corporate Financial Counseling Department

A profitable dialogue.

T. Carter Hagan heads the Irving's Corporate Financial Counseling Department. With 15 full-time professionals, the department is aptly named. "We work closely with clients on a continuing individual and confidential basis. We're here to advise. To assist. To offer informed objectivity," says Hagan.

The Irving's counseling covers two major areas:

First, there's finance—the aggregation of corporate capital at reasonable rates. For one client, the dialogue may concern the advantages and drawbacks of equity. For another, the various alternatives in a debt financing. For still another, a review of dividend policy.

Second, there's capital management—the use of capital as a resource. Here, we help clients answer such questions as: Can ROI performance standards work in my company? How can we best allocate limited investment capital? Should each division have the same goal in return on investments?

More and more companies have come to realize that a dialogue with our Corporate Financial specialists is a profitable one. How can you start talking with the people who talk your language?

Hagan answers: "We look at a relationship with the Irving as a prepaid retainer to call on our services and that's unique. For financial dialogue, call us."

Year-End Report 75 fG Bank für Gemeinwirtschaft

Gemeinwirtschaft's 1975 performance reflected the confidence of its members in the bank's basic philosophy: to work on behalf of a benefit. For fG, 1975 was a year of satisfactory earnings. The bank anticipates a continuation of the upward trend that began at the end of the recession.

An audited balance sheet as of December 31, 1975, is being announced by the President of Gemeinwirtschaft, Dr. Walter Hesselbach:

Table with 2 columns: Assets (10,036,000,000 DM), Liabilities (10,909,000,000 DM), Equity (22,400,000,000 DM).

The complete balance sheet will be contained in Bank für Gemeinwirtschaft's complete report to be released in mid-1976.

Bell Issue Sells Well; Sears Yield 8.02

By JOHN H. ALLAN
The Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company's big $450 million debenture issue yielding 8.293 percent...

The reception for these two key corporate bond issues indicated clearly that the underlying trend in the long-term bond market is still toward lower yields...

The market's getting back on the track, one Government securities dealer remarked as he surveyed the fixed-income market's late afternoon advance.

Besides the Southern Bell and Sears issues, there were these notable developments in the credit markets yesterday:
The BankAmerica Corporation disclosed plans to sell $200 million of 25-year debentures through a four-manager group led by Blyth Eastman Dillon Brothers, the leading underwriter in the sale, estimated that the issue was "probably 90 percent sold" by late afternoon.

The Department of Housing and Urban Development announced the sale of $700 million of Government-backed tax-exempt notes at a slightly higher average interest rate than a similar (but much smaller) note issue marketed last week.

One-year projects were priced to yield 8.10 percent, 15 basis points more than last week.

The Treasury announced that it would sell $6.1 billion of bills next Monday, $200 million less than is scheduled to mature April 29.

In the money market, the Federal Reserve purchased Treasury bills and negotiated repurchase agreements for some of the international accounts it handles.

In the corporate bond market, the offering of Southern Bell Telephone debentures, the $450 million issue was offered with an 8 1/4 percent interest rate and a price of 99.50 percent, at a yield of 8.387 percent.

The Sears Roebuck debenture issue, also rated Aaa/AAA, will be offered this morning with an 8 percent interest rate at a price of 99 1/2 percent to produce their 8.02 percent yield to maturity on April 1, 2006. Goldman, Sachs & Company heads the underwriters.

While the 8.02 percent yield on the Sears securities was as much as 7 basis points higher than some dealers had expected, the issue may have been priced the way it was because a $250 million issue of 7 1/2 percent notes due in 1985 that was marketed in March, 1975, had sold slowly and had dropped from 100 to 95 when it was freed to trade, producing some sour memories among investment bankers.

A $75 million issue of debentures of Beneficial Finance Company of New Jersey (guaranteed by the Beneficial Corporation) was sold yesterday at a yield of 7.835 percent by a Blyth Eastman Dillon Group. The eight-year issue is rated Aa AA.

Today, a Kidder, Peabody & Company underwriting net-12. The commission's order work is expected to offer $100 million of eight-year of Avco Financial Services, Inc. notes, at a yield of 8.587 percent.

The securities are rated A by Moody's and A3 by S. & P. In the tax-exempt note market, the Government reported that its $700,299,000 of housing project notes were sold at an average interest rate of 2.999 percent, up from 2.918 percent in a sale of urban renewal project notes on April 13 but down slightly from the 3.059 percent in a housing note sale in March.

Truck Rate Rise Approved
The Interstate Commerce Commission said yesterday it had approved an average 6 percent freight rate increase for the nation's common carrier trucking lines, effective April 12.

The commission's order affects all freight moved across state lines by regulated carriers, except for raw agricultural products.

Management of the Trust believes a successful restructuring of the Trust's subordinated Debentures is critical to the Trust's viability.

The Trust's obligation to purchase Debentures tendered is conditioned on its ability to borrow funds for the tender under its Revolving Credit Agreement. There is no assurance the Trust's senior secured lenders will agree to make funds available to purchase "junior" Debentures pursuant to the Invitation although they have indicated a willingness to consider funding a tender at the same price as previously offered to Debentureholders, $20 net per $100 principal amount without payment for accrued interest.

As of March 1, 1976, the Trust had a negative net worth of $6,203,702. The Trust's purchases of Debentures pursuant to the Invitation will increase its net worth.

The Trust failed to pay interest aggregating $450,065 due March 31, 1976 on its 7% Debentures.

The Trust does not make any recommendation as to whether Debentureholders should tender or refrain from tendering. Each holder must make his own decision as to whether or not to tender and should carefully evaluate the information in the Invitation in light of his own investment objectives.

Copies of the Invitation and Letters of Transmittal may be obtained from the Trust. Debentures accompanied by Letters of Transmittal should not be sent to the Trust but to the Depository. If you have questions, you may call the Trust's Chairman or President, collect, at 201-778-3322.

Study on Product Impacts Urged

Margaret Mead urged business yesterday to assess the impact its products and services "have on society before they are marketed."

The anthropologist, who is curator emeritus of ethnology at the American Museum of Natural History, suggested that businessmen "find out what you are doing before you do it," which she said was "a revolutionary idea."

Mr. Drucker predicted that the poorer nations would experience at least a decade of youth rebellion similar to that in this country in the late 1980's.

Tidal Marine Ex-Chairman Misdemeanor in Report

By ARNOLD H. LUBASCH Stanley Farber, former board chairman of the Tidal Marine International Corporation, pleaded guilty yesterday to a Federal charge that he had fraudulently overstated the company's earnings in a report to the Securities and Exchange Commission.

His case grew out of charges against two major Greek shipowners, five of their business associates and four former bank officials who were indicted last year as a result of an alleged scheme that was said to have obtained more than $80 million in bank loans from 1970 to 1972.

Advertising

Matching Products to Lifestyles

By PHILIP R. DOUGHERTY

The most effective advertising is the advertising that is most precisely tailored to the wants, desires, attitudes and lifestyles of the target audience.

So finding and defining that audience is high-priority work at ad agencies.

It's just what William D. Wells, with his doctorate in psychology, is doing at Needham, Harper & Steers, Chicago. He is helping to stuff the maw of its hungry computer with data on how natives in various regions live, how they feel about certain issues and what products they tend to buy.

The way he puts it is, "We want to identify the heavy user [of products] and see how he differs from others and develop a profile of his lifestyle."

And he's done just that. He knows for example that the Eastern male is more likely to want to take a trip around the world than a Southern, but is less likely to use mouthwash or a deodorant. And he also knows that the Western male tends to consume more cottage cheese, vitamin tablets and regular coffee than either of those two other groups, and more likely to read Pent house, too. (Of at least look at the pictures.)

One of the great dangers in the advertising business, which is heavily concentrated in New York and Chicago, is that the people who make the advertising think of American consumers as one big homogeneous mass. Far from it.

A good case in point is the Southern male. Mr. Wells' computer will tell you that, besides being a supporter of mouthwash and deodorants, he tends to also be a supporter of all matters concerning law and order, the traditional role of women, and the importance of children in the family. He is also more apt to be involved in community projects, but less likely than an easterner to unwind at the end of the day with a drink.

There's also less chance you'll find him reading a Sunday newspaper than men in the rest of the country but more chance you'll catch him watching "Sanford and Son" or "Hawaii Five-O." And when it comes to listening to country and western music, he's the country's top-fan. While 53 percent of the males questioned nationally said they favor the genre, 70 percent of Southerners said they dig it.

In the area of appliance ownership the Southerner leads the rest only in home freezers, but he ties with Easterners for first place in air conditioners.

But if you want to move your inventory of garbage disposal units, go West. Young men in the West own only 25 percent of the national sample claimed ownership of such a device only 8 percent in the South, 50 percent of the Western males said they had units.

All of this moderately fascinating information comes from questionnaires sent to 2,000 housewives and a like number of husbands of other housewives. The response rate was 90 percent for the women and 75 percent for men.

While Dr. Wells points out that the sample was a good one for middle America, blacks, singles, transients and the very rich and very poor are underrepresented.

You say you've gotten this far and you haven't learned anything practical? How wrong you are. You know that if you want to sell a lot of mouthwash you make a TV commercial with a gun-toting spokesman singing a country-western jingle (while accompanied by his domesticated wife and child) and run it on a Southern regional network hookup during "Sanford and Son."

Liquor Ads Versus Sales

If you were to read that the Scotch whisky category spent $25.2 million advertising in 10 top magazines last year while bourbons spent $12.6 million and vodkas spent $3.5 million, would you — being the big advertising fan that you are — immediately assume that spirit sales matched the spread?

Quite the contrary, old friend. Vodka is No. 1, bourbon, No. 2 and Scotch, No. 3.

The spending figures come from a Time magazine report reprinted in Pat Kennedy's Executive Newsletter.

A voice from the spirits world was quick to clarify the strange disparity of advertising to sales. There has never been the kind of advertising per case ratios in vodka as there is in Scotch, he said.

And besides, he went on, with the exception of Heublein's Smirnoff, few vodka brands make enough profit per case to afford much advertising. Another factor, he noted, was competition. In the Scotch arena, several brands are fighting for top spots while in vodka, Smirnoff, the first brand to advertise heavily, dominates its market.

Sidamon-Eristoff Paper

Constantine Sidamon-Eristoff, who held a number of posts during the terms of Mayor John V. Lindsay, is president of a company that will begin to publish a weekly neighborhood newspaper today. It is called the East Side Express and 35,000 copies will be distributed (at 25 cents each) between 14th and 96th Streets.

Mr. Sidamon-Eristoff, now a member of the Metropolitan Transportation Authority, has as publisher, Robert Treanor, already publisher of Chelsea, Clinton News and The Westsider. He'll keep all three jobs.

CITICORP REPORTS RISE IN EARNINGS

trusts, Mr. Wriston said that $375 million worth were not meeting payments, while interest rates had been reduced on an additional $167 million. Taken together, REIT loans were yielding 3.74 percent on an annual basis, as compared to the original annual rate of 7.34 percent. For 1975, this rate was 5.82 percent.

This deficiency reduced per share operating earnings by 11 cents to 73 cents, Mr. Wriston said. In 1975, bad real estate loans lowered per share operating results by 5 cents to 68 cents.

In a separate announcement, Citicorp said that net income for the first quarter, including securities gains and losses, was $39.7 million, up 4 percent from $36.6 million in 1975. For both operating and net results, the 1975 figures were lowered to reflect retroactive increases in state and local taxes.

C. Schmidt Brewery Sold

PHILADELPHIA, April 20 (UPI)—Officials of C. Schmidt and Sons Brewery today confirmed the sale of the 116-year-old concern to a local beer distributor, William H. Pfau, for $15.9 million.

The sale, which ended more than a year of efforts by Schmidt's stockholders to sell the concern, includes the brewery's plants here and in Cleveland that employ 1,400 workers.

Business Briefs

Japan Payments Surplus Up in March

TOKYO, April 20 (Reuters)—Japan's overall balance-of-payments surplus rose to $660 million in March from $619 million in February and $298 million in March last year, Finance Ministry figures showed today.

The March surplus reduced the payments deficit for the whole of the 1975 fiscal year ended in March to $1.77 billion, only slightly over half the fiscal 1974 deficit of $3.39 billion, the Ministry said. The improvement in the full year's performance reflected an increase in the visible trade surplus within the context of an overall contraction of two-way trade, and a sharp reduction in the deficit on long-term capital movements.

Nigeria to Get U.S. Lockheed Papers

WASHINGTON, April 20 (Reuters)—The Justice Department today signed a formal agreement with Nigeria under which it will turn over documents relating to alleged bribes and illicit payoffs by the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation to promote sales to the West African country.

It was the fourth such agreement between the United States and another country relating to the Lockheed payoff scandal. The Justice Department has already turned over similar material to Japan, Italy and the Netherlands. The officials declined to specify the allegations regarding Lockheed sales in Nigeria. Nigeria has ordered six Lockheed C-130 cargo planes, four of which have so far been delivered. Lockheed has admitted paying at least $22 million in bribes or kickbacks to foreign officials to promote exports.

As Mr. Feldman sees it, the recession is past and there is a pent-up demand for prime office space now, emanating largely from New York City. Negotiations are being under way with Manhattan-based companies looking for several hundred thousand square feet of space, he said. The first Triad building is to be ready for occupancy in February. At the same point in office construction in the past, Mr. Feldman said, there have never been prospects for

On Long Island this problem is exacerbated by the failure of two Long Island banks within a three-month period about a year ago. These were the Security National Bank, which was taken over by the Chemical Bank, and the Franklin National Bank, whose assets were purchased by the European American and Trust Company.

According to planners, under 6 percent of the land in Nassau County is undeveloped. There is a "key piece" east of New Hyde Park Road between the expressway and Northern State Parkway where both housing and commercial development are considered likely.

In the city, where office construction is in what might be called a holding pattern, the Fisher Brothers organization is in the process of clearing a site bounded by 52d and 53d Streets, in mid-block between Park and Madison Avenues. The site is just behind, or to the west, of the Racquet Club building on Park Avenue. There was a time when Fisher Brothers was negotiating with the club for the use of its air rights in office construction on the Fisher plot. Those talks are dormant now, according to Larry Fisher, a principal in the organization. In fact, construction plans are also dormant. Mr. Fisher foresees a period of three to five years before the demand for space had soaked up enough of the supply to warrant new office construction. In the meantime, the midtown market has "improved tremendously," he said.

Disciplinary Cases
NDA CHARLTON
NGTON, April 20—The Supreme Court refused to...
Justice Byron R. White...
Justice William J. Brennan...

The Government should try to preserve the nation's "ethnic heritage," Representative Morris K. Udall then said that he and Mr. Carter, the former governor of Georgia, held the same "technical" positions on open housing but that the decision is expected to have less significance than it may have elsewhere. The New York regional office of the Department of Housing and Urban Development is considered by most housing observers to be among the nation's most liberal. It showed its willingness to finance public housing in a non-integrated neighborhood in the Forest Hills project, which was built after much controversy with major architectural revision. Nevertheless, much new public housing in recent years has been in neighborhoods of minority concentration that often coincide with the areas of greatest housing need for people who cannot afford housing at the market rents. The ruling also comes at a time when government action to integrate racially homogeneous areas has become an issue in the Presidential contest. The point arose when Jimmy Carter said he believed in maintaining the "ethnic purity" of neighborhoods, a phrase he later apologized for. He said that while he would enforce the open-housing laws, he did not believe in using the power of the Government to force intrusions on ethnic enclaves in urban areas. President Ford subsequently took a similar view, saying the Government should try to preserve the nation's "ethnic heritage."

Jet Airliner Lands Safely, With a Passenger Hurt

By RICHARD WITKIN
An Allegheny Airlines twin engine jet and an unidentified small piston-engine plane nearly collided yesterday as the jet was making an approach to land at MacArthur Airport in Islip, L.I.
One woman aboard the BAC-111 airliner suffered minor injuries when the airline pilot pulled up abruptly to avoid the small craft, a spokesman for the airline said.
The two planes were reported by the Federal Aviation Administration to have come within about 300 feet of each other horizontally and about 150 feet vertically.
An F.A.A. spokesman said the small craft, which was flying under "visual flight rules" and was therefore not under supervision of air-traffic controllers, had not shown up as a blip on the F.A.A. radarscope. If it had shown up, he said, traffic controllers would have advised the jet crew of the potential hazard.
The near-collision occurred about 11 A.M. at an altitude of about 2,000 feet above the Captree Bridge to Fire Island. The airliner, Flight 352, was going from Washington's National Airport to Boston by way of MacArthur Airport and New Haven. Twenty-four passengers and four crew members were on board.
A Sharp Turn
As reported later by the captain, the jet was about six to seven miles from the approach end of Runway 6, headed 60 degrees to the northeast, when he suddenly saw the small plane in a turn directly ahead of him.
He pulled his plane into a sharp climbing turn to the right, missing the small craft by what he later estimated to be "several hundred feet."
The jet pilot then circled the airport and made a normal landing.
The injured woman, identified as...

Carter Says Ruling About Housing Aids Equal Opportunity

PITTSBURGH, April 20 — Jimmy Carter, a candidate for the Democratic Presidential nomination, said today that the Supreme Court's decision on public housing in the suburbs "suits me fine."
Two weeks ago, in a comment that introduced the phrase "ethnic purity" and started a controversy, Mr. Carter said that the Federal Government should not take arbitrary initiatives to change the social and economic mix of established neighborhoods.
But he also emphasized his support of affirmative action by the Government to prevent discrimination in new housing financed with Federal assistance.
Today, he viewed the Court's decision as a victory for equal opportunity.
It still leaves a substantial amount of flexibility to local communities," he said in a meeting with the editorial board of The Pittsburgh Post-Gazette. "I've said that when Federal money is spent in a community, there ought to be an affirmative action program enforced.
I don't think this ruling means that in every neighborhood and block in Pittsburgh you have to have low-income housing built. But if there is definite pattern of collusion between the community and H.U.D. to exclude low-income housing, that's illegal."

Brain Casts in Old Skull: A New Scientific Study

and interpretations of the endocranial casts or "endocasts" and his expertise in estimating the cranial capacity of fossil skulls, many of which are incomplete, have made him a highly regarded authority on the evolution of the human brain. Much of his work is sponsored by the National Science Foundation.

"My endocasts are never going to prove conclusively that a creature had language ability," he said between sips of lapsang souchong, one of a dozen exotic teas he stocks and brews in his lab. "What I'm trying to do is to see whether we can't look at these casts and see whether the relationships between various parts of the brain have changed with evolution. If we could see certain changes, we might be able to correlate them with evidence of behavioral changes from the archeological record. Then we might come to understand our past a little better."

Before the 41-year-old scientist began his work 14 years ago, examining the internal structure of rat brains at the University of California at Berkeley, about the only thing known about the evolution of the human brain was that it grew larger than those of apes. At some arbitrary point, it was held, the brain became big enough safely to be regarded as human. Dr. Holloway holds that size alone is not nearly as important as internal organization. There are key differences between the way an ape's brain is put together and a human's, and hazy but useful markers of some of these differences can be seen on the casts.

Sign of Brain Volume

For example, the boundary between the occipital, or visual, lobe, in the back of the brain and the parietal lobe just forward of the occipital, where much distinctively human thinking is done, is a groove known as the lunata sulcus. This feature can be seen on endocasts and its position indicates whether a relatively larger share of brain volume has been devoted to one part of the brain or the other. In monkeys and apes, the lunata sulcus is positioned toward the front of the brain, indicating a largish visual lobe and smallish "thinking" lobes. In modern human brains, the boundary is toward the back of the brain, indicating a reduction in the size of the visual lobe and an enlargement in the thinking regions.

Endocasts of extinct predecessors of modern man such as Australopithecus and the small-brained Homos show the lunata sulcus in the human position even though the total brain size may be barely larger than that of an ape. Dr. Holloway speculates that this reorganization of the brain was related to the appearance of a wholly new form of behavior including such characteristically human cultural attributes as language, tool making and a closely knit social structure oriented to a home base.

Different Niches

He suggests further that once this broadly useful evolutionary step had been taken, it granted access to a variety of ecological niches that no previous animals had been able to exploit. Populations of those early humans adapted to different niches, an evolutionary phenomenon known as adaptive radiation, and went on to become the various contemporaneous forms of early man that recent fossil discoveries indicate were living between one and three million years ago. All but one of the human lineages eventually died out.

The starting point for these theories is the endocast, which is the untraced eye look like a misshapen blob of rubber. In fact, close inspection often reveals not only the broad contours of the brain but details such as the paths of tiny blood vessels that once lay between the brain and the skull.

"Each skull that I do has to be approached on its own terms," Dr. Holloway said, referring to the fact that most fossil skulls are actually many fragments of shattered bone that have been glued together again. The reconstructions may be fragile and missing several pieces.

Layers of Latex

After the gaps have been filled with clay to seal the brain case, Dr. Holloway pours a puddle of liquid rubber latex through the foramen magnum, the opening for the spinal cord, into the cranium. He sloshes it about to coat the entire inner surface, pours out the excess and lets the rubber dry for an hour or more. Six or seven more layers must be poured inside the skull to build up a sturdy thickness. Skull and rubber are then cured in a 140-degree oven for four hours to set the shape.

If the skull is whole and cannot be disassembled into pieces, Dr. Holloway collapses the dried latex and pulls it out through the foramen magnum and its elasticity springs it back to the proper shape. The rubber is then filled with plaster of Paris to make the cast rigid.

In cases where the skull can be disassembled and later reglued, Dr. Holloway prefers to put in the plaster before removing the rubber from the skull to insure retaining the proper shape.

This was the technique used on the 1470 skull. Working in a Nairobi laboratory of the National Museums of Kenya, Dr. Holloway allowed the plaster to harden inside the skull and then carefully brushed acetone along certain joints to dissolve the glue. He had planned to separate the cranium into four pieces, remove the cast and reglue the fossil.

"It fell apart beautifully," he recalled. "The first thing I did was look for Broca's area. I had suspected it from earlier examination of the cranium. I was immediately impressed with it."

Dr. Holloway then measured the cast to check for accuracy against the original dimensions of the skull, and assured himself that it was virtually distortion-free. The whole job took a week and a half.

While some features of a cast, like the Broca's area, are immediately apparent to the trained eye, Dr. Holloway suspects that many others that are not may be revealed through more sophisticated topographic analysis of the cast's shape.

In his Columbia laboratory he uses two mechanical devices to measure the subtle contours of each cast. One device, designed and constructed by Dr. Holloway of precision machined aluminum and brass (his early training was as a metallurgical engineer), is called a three-dimensional coordinate caliper system.

Detects Asymmetries

It is used to detect lopsidedness, or asymmetries, in the brain. The brains of lower animals are generally symmetrical, the right hemisphere being a mirror image of the left. It is assumed their functions are mirrored also.

But, as evolution approaches man, asymmetries begin to appear. In humans these are known to be related to various specialized mental abilities. It is assumed that if an extinct ancestor of man had certain asymmetries in his brain, they have been related to early stages of human mental abilities.

The other device, designed by Alan Walker, a Harvard anatomist, and built of Plexiglas, is called a polar coordinate stereoplotter.

This device makes it possible to measure the distance from the center of the cast to any point on the surface. Dr. Holloway, with the help

'Rich Man, Poor Man,' 'Family' Set on ABC

ABC-TV yesterday completed its fall program schedule with the announcement that two successful prime-time series, "Rich Man, Poor Man" and "Family," will return next season.

The network, in announcing the bulk of its schedule several weeks ago, had left a Tuesday night period open for only one of the two series. In order to make room for the returning shows, the network has postponed, until early 1977, the premiere of "Feather and Father," a legal drama originally scheduled to begin this fall.

"Family," a series in a modern setting, will be broadcast at 10 P.M. on Tuesday. Based on the novel by Irwin Shaw, "Rich Man, Poor Man" will be retitled "Rich Man, Poor Man-Book II" and begin where the novel leaves off—in 1965. It is scheduled for Saturday nights at 10 o'clock.

of his graduate students, is currently taking such measurements at about 300 points evenly spaced over the surface of each cast.

From the numbers, he plans to draw contour maps of the casts and, using such mathematical techniques as trend surface analysis and multivariate analysis, compare the contours to see whether those from one species of early man fit a pattern distinct from that of another species.

On Mathematical Teams

Preliminary analysis of some of the contour data indicates that the casts do fall into species groups on mathematical terms alone.

"I realize that 300 data points on a cast may be more than we need. I have to admit that I may be using mathematical overkill," Dr. Holloway remarked. "But once the basic data are established, and if I know what I'm doing, we may have a very powerful analytic tool."

This summer he plans to go to Nairobi for a few weeks to examine, among other things, a newly discovered skull of Homo erectus that is about a million years older than the one he is using as fossils of his human ancestor. He plans to make a cast of the brain case.

This new find, like so many in recent years, has strengthened the view that man's lineage is much older than had been supposed. Dr. Holloway's discovery of essentially human patterns in the very early, small brains of various kinds of early man has added a significant new dimension to this view, strongly suggesting that man's most distinctive attributes did not suddenly appear recently as the capstone of human evolution.

Rather, Dr. Holloway's work is showing, an essentially human brain, qualitatively different from that of the apes, was in existence at the earliest known stages of man's emergence, before the human body looked very different from that of the apes.

TV: 'Blind Sunday' Is a Fine Drama

By JOHN J. O'CONNOR

Probably the biggest fault to be found with ABC-TV's "Afterschool Specials" is that there aren't enough of them. Presentation at the rate of approximately one afternoon a month is not overwhelming. But it is more than being done at the other two commercial networks. And the over-all quality has been outstanding.

Today's 4:30 P.M. offering is "Blind Sunday," which uses the developing relationship between a sightless teen-age girl and a sighted boy for a sensitive excursion through the physical and emotional world of blindness. Jeff (Leigh McCloskey) is as shy and socially inhibited as Elena (Jewel Blanch) is feisty and outspoken. Unable to deal with her blindness easily, he spends a day blindfolded in an effort to comprehend her experiences.

The script, written by Arthur Barron and Fred Pressburger, neatly combines the gentle blooming of a young love affair and the harsh realities of dealing with physical handicap. With the firmly established team of Daniel Wilson as producer and Larry Elkann as director, the entire production is handled beautifully.

Mr. Wilson would appear to be particularly fortunate in his casting. His last "Afterschool Special," called "Me and Dad's New Wife," featured Kristy McNichol, who also played young Buddy in ABC's recent "Family" series. And, in today's program, Mr. McCloskey and Miss Blanch are equally impressive.

To be fair, it should be mentioned here that NBC's "Special Treat" series, similar to "Afterschool Specials" but even more infrequent, did have a superb entry not too long ago in "Papa and Me," a touching story of a young boy (Matthew Babortaux) and his Italian grandfather (Joseph Mascolo) playing their special games in a New York neighborhood. Produced by Michael McLagan, directed by William D'Angelo, the hour captured a "video verité" atmosphere that was remarkably warm, amusing and moving.

Last night's "Inside Public Television" documentary, on CBS at 10 o'clock, touched briefly on most of the key issues currently affecting public TV—localism versus a national network, a lack of financing, developing further sources of financing in government or the foundations or the corporate sector. With Charles Kuralt as narrator, Paul Greenberg's production may have said too little for the professional public, but it established a solid basis for further exploration.

The problem is that there will probably be little or no further exploration. Television is curiously and even notoriously reluctant to look at television. "Media" col-ums are now familiar in the press, but broadcasting remains shy about self-examination, even though the public does seem interested in backstage processes and maneuvers. The highest rating garnered by ABC's Close-Up series went to Marjane Sanders' inside look at commercial TV. That was a couple of seasons ago. The rest has generally been silence.

Each year, following Alexander H. Cohen's production of the Tony Awards, I have found myself writing a column about the Tony show's being the classiest awards show on television. The basic material is simply better. The contenders have at least some connection with quality. The recipients seem more sophisticated, more articulate. The audience is genuinely enthusiastic.

This year found Jane Fonda quoting André Malraux; Edward Herrman winning for best actor but gallantly thanking Ruth Gordon, his co-star; and Shirley Knight talking unselfconsciously about "seriousness" and dedicating her award to the memory of Paul Robeson. The show began with a dazzling helicopter shot of the Statue of Liberty and the Manhattan skyline. It included a clever review of show tunes by Ed Linder, Michelle Lee, Leslie Uggams and Clifton Davis.

The evening had its faults. Video clips of past shows diluted the spontaneity of the proceedings. The presence of a "Chorus Line" made most of the awards entirely predictable. But the Tony show still adds up to the best awards show we've got.

Morgenthau to Give Assistants Fuller Responsibility on Cases

of 20 prosecutors under the direction of Roderick C. Lankler, who will become chief of the trial division.

"The new system will provide much more intensive and continuous training for inexperienced members of our staff," said Mr. Morgenthau, adding that the more serious cases would continue to be handled by more experienced assistants. "Giving more training and experience early on should help in our recruiting," he said.

For many years the Manhattan District Attorney's office was able to pick among the brightest law-school graduates, but in recent years it has had trouble recruiting the most promising prospects because its starting salary lagged far behind that of the private sector. First-year assistants now receive 13,000 a year—nearly $10,000 less than most Wall Street law firms pay first-year associates.

Under the new structure in the office, the Criminal Court, Indictment and Supreme Court bureaus will be eliminated. The homicide bureau—which has been considered an elite unit in the office but has been criticized for its handling of several cases in the last few years—will also be dismantled. Some bureaus—such as the frauds, rackets and consumer-protection units—will remain independent entities, while others, including the sex-crimes and major-felony bureaus, will be absorbed into the structure. Members of those units, Mr. Morgenthau said, will continue their specialties.

The new system, Mr. Morgenthau said, will result in savings in terms of trial delays, weakened cases, unnecessary police time, postponed decisions and unfair and unnecessary hardships for defendants and witness.

The system now in effect was begun in 1938 by the late Thomas E. Dewey when he was District Attorney and was left untouched by the late Frank S. Hogan.

"At that time, when the office was much smaller and the caseload was far less," Mr. Morgenthau said, "the creation of bureaus specializing in particular stages of prosecution instituted a professionalism and concentration of expertise that made the Dewey-Hogan office the model for other urban prosecutors."

"But in recent years, as the criminal law became far more complex and the caseload grew far faster than the size of the prosecutor's staff, the old system became a cause of delay and inefficiency."

U.S. teenage girls spend more for home furnishings than Brazil does for coffee.

Nearly three out of five first brides (57.9%) are 20 years and under. In 1976 there'll be an estimated 802,000.

In preparation for their weddings, 24.7% of all teenagers own flatware; 21.1% dinnerware, and 13.6% their own glassware.

Our teenage girls are responsible for $3.2 billion spent for home furnishings.

They start by decorating their own rooms, and more than half also help select and buy furnishings for the rest of the house.

Then, with more girls marrying at 18 and 19 than at any other age* they're soon making buying decisions for their own homes.

We know they prefer multi-purpose furniture with clean, simple lines and lots of storage space. Bookcase cubes. L-shaped sofas. Loft beds.

And guess what else is in? Hope chests.

From the age of 16 on, teenagers use them to stash away the things they'll enjoy when they marry: linens, glassware, tableware, flatware.

Teenagers keep sound in sight. They're surrounded by stereos, radios, TVs, tape recorders.

And there's a big fashion for electrical appliances. Woks, cookpots, beauty and grooming aids go to college, appear at bridal showers, are displayed as wedding gifts.
